Green Predicts Other Walkouts

Labor Leaders Expect 15,000 to Leave Jobs by Monday.

By Felix Bruner.

President Roosevelt made it plain yesterday that striking relief workers in New York and elsewhere are under no compulsion to take jobs but that those who refuse to work will receive no other form of relief.

As the movement to refuse relief jobs on the ground that subsistence wages are too low threatened to spread from New York to the rest of the country, the President indicated that there would be no compromise.

Relief jobs have been offered, the President said, with the intention of replacing the dole because continuance of the dole is considered bad for the country as a whole. He pointed out that the jobs are intended to provide temporary relief pending return to private employment.

The President pointed out that union relief workers who are objecting to working for wages below union scales are not compelled to work at their own trades but that they are free to take other forms of relief employment.

No Strikes, He Declared.

Questioned at his press conference concerning relief "strikes," President Roosevelt said there were no strikes but merely a return to their homes by some of the workers.

The issue of whether subsistence wages or prevailing scales should be paid under the $4,000,000,000 relief program has been present since the works bill was introduced last January. Backed by the American Federation of Labor, Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, attempted to secure passage of an amendment providing for payment of prevailing wages. The amendment was defeated after President Roosevelt and Administration leaders insisted that the goal of putting 3,500,000 persons to work could not be reached with the money available if prevailing wages were paid.

Both Senator McCarran and William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, predicted yesterday that the trouble would spread as rapidly as relief money is made available for works projects.

Only 729 on Strike.

From New York, where the highest relief wage in the entire country, $93.50 per month for skilled workers, is being paid, the Associated Press reported that the strike was getting off to a slow start, but quoted union leaders as predicting that 15,000 union men would be out Monday and that they would be joined by many nonunion workers. Relief officials reported that 727 out of a total of 15,000 union and 85,000 nonunion workers were on strike.

Union leaders said 2,500 of their men had walked out and that most of the others would be out by Monday.

President Roosevelt's attitude backed that expressed earlier by Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, who said yesterday that "if they don't want to work, they don't have to," and that of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, works progress administrator for New York City.

The Associated Press quoted Gen. Johnson as saying that all strikers who had not returned to their jobs by Monday night would be dropped from the pay roll. He had previuosly set the daedline as last night. He said he would give the strikers the week-end "to think things over."

Reiterating his charge that the strike was Communist-inspired, he said:

"In this case the Government is the employer. Therefore it is a strike against the Government."

But Green, active opponent of Communism, declared in Atlantic

Pork Prices Spring To New High Levels

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—Reflecting increased prices of hogs on the Chicago live stock market, housewives today were paying around 39 cents a pound for select pork chops, meat dealers reported. Last week they paid from 29 to 35 cents a pound.

Anice 3-pound pork roast cost 24 to 24½ cents a pound today. The same could have been had last week at 23 to 24 cents.

Prices of fresh pork—chops, ribs and roasts—to the detailer show an almost overnight change in livestock costs, dealers explained. The fluctuations in live stock prices may not be noted incured pork—hams and bacon—for a two weeks or more as packers can hold this for advisable market.

Luther Denies Nazi Campaign Hits Religions

The German Situation

German Ambassador Hans Luther, returning from his homeland, said in New York yesterday that it was "absurd to talk about religious intimidation in Germany." People in Germany "are allowed to worship in whatever church they choose," he said.

From Berlin, coincident with a report that the unemployed list had been slashed by 122,000, came dispatches from the Free State of Brunswick depriving Jews of doing business with Gentiles. Nazidom previously had maintained that Jews were not to be interfered with commercially.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 9.—R. Hans Luther, German Ambassador to the United States, arrived today from the fatherland with the declaration that "it is absurd to talk about religious intimidation in Germany."

"If only the great evolution in Germany were understood in America," he said, "it would be of great interest to the American people." He added that people in Germany "are allowed to worship in whatever church they choose."

Nearly 100 police officers were detailed about the pier where the German diplomat disembarked from the steamship New York en route to Washington, but there was no disturbance.

Asked regarding reports that individuals in Germany are denied self-expression, Dr. Luther declared:

"There are some people who differ in opinion in every country. It is no different here in America than in Germany. The important thing is that Germany has made tremendous progress and I can tell you honestly there is no serious undercurrent.

"What we do not understand is that our friends outside of Germany can not see the evolution that has taken place there. I can not go into the details. You speak of Catholics and of Protestants registering annoyance in Germany. I myself have met many Catholics and many Protestants and among them all I found a desire to cooperate in solving the problems, and that is the truth and nothing else.

"We feel," he said, "that the United States should have no interest in interfering with the interior life of Germany. The only way

British Ready To Ship Arms If Peace Fails

The Italo-Ethiopia Crisis.

Great Britain will resume arms shipments to Ethiopia if the tripartite conference in Paris next week fails to bring peace in East Africa, it was indicated in London.

James W. Gerard, U. S. Ambassador to Germany before the World War, denied emphatically that he was in Rome to intercede on the part of the United States in an effort for peace.

From Addis Ababa, a one-man Ethiopian mission left for Japan, presumably to seek credits for the purchase of war materials.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 9.—Great Britain's temporary ban on arms shipments to Ethiopia may be immediately lifted in the event of a failure of a tri-power conference in Paris next week on the Italo-Ethiopian dispute, it was learned tonight.

The British are convinced the conference with France and Italy will definitely determine whether there will be war or peace. If no solution is found the government may decide to let arms go forward.

[Ethiopia yesterday was reported in Warsaw to be purchasing army supplies in Poland, especially uniforms. A group of representatives of the African kingdom now in Lodz was said to be negotiating for further purchases.]

Active U. S. Interest Cited.

English press reports asserted the United States is taking an active interest in the controversy and that James W. Gerard, former American Ambassador to Germany, was en route to Rome at Washington's request to talk things over with Premier Mussolini.

[Officials of the State Department said they were unaware of any order dispatching Gerard to Rome as an official American representative. In Rome Gerard categorically denied he had come to confer with Mussolini on the Ethiopian situation as a representative of the American Government. "I always felt admiration for Il Duce," he said, "before the Italo-Ethiopian affair became acute and asked to meet him." He will be received tomorrow.]

London continues to look to Premier Laval of France to take the initiative in the tri-partite discussions, feeling that he is better able to swing Italy around.

Volunteers Are Rejected.

The Ethiopian Legation declined with thanks the request of hundreds of Englishmen that they be allowed to enlist in the Ethiopian army. It was understood the refusal was based on the lack of supplies and the uncertainty over the status of foreign soldiers should there be war.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Aug. 9.—Italy officially announced preparations tonight for a tri-power conference in Paris next week on the Italo-Ethiopian situation, but the Nation, honoring seven countrymen killed in an airplane crash near Cairo as the first heroes of the country's East African program, reflected no optimism over the possible outcome.

Baron Pompeo Aloisi, head of the Italian delegation during recent negotiations at Geneva, was chosen to lead Italy's representatives at the talks in Paris with British and French diplomats.

Laval Presses Deflation Edict, Troops Mass to Thwart Riots

Unprecedented Convocation of All French Prefects Told to Enforce Unpopular Order; Shipping Tie-Up Broken at Le Havre.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Aug. 9.—Premier Laval, unrelenting despite widespread disorders and bloodshed, told all save one of France's 86 prefects today to enforce firmly his unpopular deflationary decrees.

One prefect was missing from the meeting called here by Laval, unprecedented in French history. He was the Prefect of Var, in which Toulon is situated. He took charge of troops patroling the streets there after yesterday's rioting.

One thousand guards were sent to Toulon as reinforcements to prevent a recurrence of last night's fighting, when two were killed and from 50 to 200 injured. Other ports seemed to settle down to normal work today.

The strike of the French Line crew ended at Le Havre with the sailing for New York of the Champlain. More than 800 passengers were delayed two days.

Laval, after promulgating a mass of new decree laws under his virtually dictatorial powers, had called the prefects together to see that living costs are reduced in line with the wage cuts.

Price cuts are the government's chief weapon against unrest over the economy slashes for defense of the franc. A stimulant to fallen export trade likewise was sought by the substitution of higher protective tariffs for the trade, throttling import quotas, which have handicapped commercial negotiations.

A committee was appointed to set

Clipper Starts 5,400 Mi. Hop Across Pacific

By Clyde Du Bose,
A Staff Correspondent.

Solomon's Island, Md., Aug. 9.—Fish, like chorus girls and lightning bugs, do their best slaying after the sun has gone down. That was the first thing Dr. R. V. Truitt learned about after-dark aquatic life in his two-nights' stay on the bottom of Chesapeake Bay in a new type of diving bell known as a bentharium.

Dr. Truitt, head of the Chesapeake Biological Laboratory, at Solomon's Island, today admitted he and the laboratory students who have descended in the bentharium have been unable to find out why fish don't bite in a northeast storm. Otherwise the hours spent at the bottom of the bay—it's about 30 feet deep where the bentharium is located—have been highly successful.

Just what facts about aquatic life have been discovered, aside from the frolicsome mood of fish atinght, have not been revealed by Dr. Truitt and his coinventor of the diving contraption, Gilbert Klingle, of the Maryland Natural History Society. They're saving these facts until they can be tabulated for release in official publications.

The purpose of the bentharium's trip to the depths of Solomon's Island was for the scientists to learn how fish fight, what they prefer to eat, why is a sea nettle, and other things heretofore unknown about life beneath the waves.

Although the diving bell is supposed to keep occupants safely under water for days at a time, it has been coming up and down about as often as an elevator in a small apartment house ever since it was launched late Tuesday afternoon. Four and six hours shifts have been the rule.

Plans call for the bentharium to dive into the bay's deepest waters, 183 feet, later this summer. Shaped like a fat cylinder, it is capable of holding three persons, but three were more of a crowd when in the bentharium.

Two can sit comfortably on the sand bags which serve as upholstery as well as ballast. And two can look with unobstructed view from the round plate glass window into the greenish waters of the bay where fish traffic is heaviest at night. Usually those two are Dr. Truitt and Klingle.

They are to be assisted in their undersea studies by Dr. Victor Shelford, of the University of Illinois, described as the Nation's foremost ecologist, who arrived at this place a couple of days ago.

Seattle's Burlesque of Mikado Arouses Japanese Consulate

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, Aug. 9.—Despite hints of possible protests, a Japanese "Mikado" and "an Ethiopian Emperor" were burlesqued together today in a "fox hunt" staged for fun.

Sponsors of the event minimized the potentialities of the burlesque, but a guarded statement came later from a spokesman at the Japanese consulate.

"You Americans can understand that it is a humorous matter," he said. "The Japanese, however, might consider it as bad taste, at least."

Japan protested last week against a caricature in "Vanity Fair" portraying Emperor Hirohito between the shafts of a small carriage bearing a scroll labeled "The Nobel Peace Prize." The Japanese contended it showed the emperor in a manual position—drawing a jinrikisha—but the magazine editor pointed out that it was intended to be a gun carriage.

The incident brought forth apologies—that no insult to the Japanese monarch was intended.

In the fox (coyote) hunt, put on by members of the Capital Hill Commercial Club as a humorous affair in a quiet residential district shortly after dawn, a club member representing the "Mikado" attired in regalia and trappings pulled a jinrikisha, bearing another member described as an "Ethiopian emperor."

Another member was attired as a "Mussolini."

New Canaan, Conn., Aug. 9 (AP).—Ambassador Saito, Japanese envoy to the United States, said at his summer home tonight that he had read of the "fox hunt" incident in the newspapers but that he would have to know more of the details before taking any action.

Job Insurance Assured As Social Security Bill Goes to White House

Senate Quickly Adopts Measure Carrying Pension for Aged.

Assent Expected By the President

By Robert C. Albright.

Only the certain signature of the President last night stood in the path of the Administration's gigantic omnibus social security program, which swept to Senate approval yesterday following weeks of conference uncertainty.

The No. 1 reform measure in the Roosevelt program was sped to the White House after the Senate, with practically no debate, and within 24 hours of favorable House action, finally approved the report.

Approval came as the recent brisk click in the legislative tempo was moderately slowed down in the Senate by gathering opposition to the Walsh bill imposing NRA wages and hour regulations on companies doing business with the Government.

Adjournment Cry Loud.

The adjournment drive was still in full cry, however, as evidenced by progress made in shaking loose the Guffey coal bill from the House Ways and Means Committee, in Senate revision of the House tax measure and in ironing out of additional banking and utility bill conference differences.

Keeping stride with the swift pace set by Congress, the President signed the motor carrier regulation bill giving the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to regulate rates, the hours of employment, safety equipment and securities issued by motor carriers.

Failure of the President to urge oil legislation at this session in his petroleum message to Congress yesterday, seeking instead merely congressional consent to State oil and gas conservation compacts, was taken as another favorable adjournment omen.

Administered by a social security board of three members, entirely independent of the Labor Department, the vast Federal program fostering old age pensions, unemployment insurance and public health aids, will swing into almost immediate operation with the President's signature.

Purposes of the Bill.

1. Pensions for needy old persons over 65, on a 50-50 matching basis with the States, with the Government contributing up to $15 monthly.

2. Contributory old-age pensions for industrial employes over 65, starting in January, 1942, and paying pensions of from $10 to $85 monthly, based on wages earned after January, 1936.

3. Unemployment insurance to be administered by the States, fed by a Federal fund, and protecting those working for employes of eight or more persons for any 20 weeks in the year.

4. Pensions for the needy blind, on a 50-50 matching basis with the States, the Government contributing up to $15 monthly.

5. Federal aid to dependent children, mothers and children, helpless and neglected children, medical care for crippled children, and funds for public health promotion and rehabilitation of the physically disabled.

The Nation would be transformed into 48 State laboratories for social experimentation, under the program, holding promise not only of pensions for the old, but weekly stipends for the unemployed, maternity, child and health grants. To launch the ambitious project, $95,000,000 in Federal appropriations will be provided the first year.

Scattered throughout the United States there are now more than 7,500,000 old persons, 65 or over. Not all, by any means, would benefit from the old-age assistance proposals. To receive pensions under the outright grants the applicant first would have to be in need of assistance, and second, would have to live in a State which pays pensions to its old. Thirty-three States have old-age pension plans of some kind,

Senate Body Maps Secret Tax Redraft

Finance Committee Is Pledged Not to Reveal Debates.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Working under a pledge of secrecy behind closed doors, the Senate Finance Committee yesterday commenced the thorny task of rewriting the controversial Roosevelt "share-the-wealth" tax bill.

At the beginning of the job Chairman Pat Harrison extracted a promise from each member that no action of the committee would be revealed until the task is done and the bill ready to be reported to the Senate, which he hoped would be Monday or Tuesday. He justified this action on the ground that the committee should be protected from outside pressure.

Despite the pledge of secrecy, however, reports were widespread on Capitol Hill that during the day the committee voted 11 to 8 to strike out the inheritance tax section of the bill passed by the House, with, it was reported, the famed illustration of what would happen to the Ford Motor Co., under such levies, playing an important part in the discussion.

Such action may mean much or little. In the first place, as the committee battles over the bill all decisions are taken tentatively and may be reversed at any time. Assuming that the report of the 11-to-8 decision was correct, however, the inheritance tax section in its entirety was out of the bill as it stood last night.

Committee Members Silent.

Members of the committee declined to indicate whether the inheritance tax would be out of the bill when it reaches the Senate floor. If it is, it is an action of the utmost importance, since it strikes down a major point in the President's program and substantially reduces the estimated revenue that will come from the tax bill.

But the vote yesterday does not necessarily mean complete rejection of an inheritance tax. The committee today may approve a substitute for the rejected House provision. Thus in the end, a modified schedule of inheritance rates, starting at, say $300,000, instead of $50,000 and $10,000, as in the House, may be found in the bill.

In addition it was widely acknowledged before the Finance Committee closed its hearings that the administrative provisions in the inheritance tax section would require redrafting. This is a job for the technical experts and it is expected they will have a new inheritance tax section ready for the committee today.

Major Changes Seen.

It also was reported that the Finance Committee had determined on some changes in the corporation excess-profits tax section of the measure, but the details could not be learned, except that the existing capital stock tax of $1 per $1,000 had been increased to $1.50.

This would seem to indicate that the committee may have decreased the range of the excess-profits tax and was seeking to tighten up that source of revenue by imposing a greater levy on the capital base, on which the excess-profits tax would be figured, in order to meet objections that the basis for computing taxable profits was arbitrary and fictitious in many cases.

The Treasury is unenthusiastic about the excess profits tax section, inserted by the House as a substitute for the reduction it made in the range of rates on corporation income proposed by the President. Robert H. Jackson, Internal Revenue Bureau counsel, did not flatly oppose the excess profits tax, but insisted that it not be enacted as a

A SHOUTED "you're a damn liar" reverberated in the historic chamber, but the words were withdrawn so quickly that calm was immediately restored. Representative Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, directed the remark at Representative Sisson (Democrat), New York. Knutson was gloating over what he called Rhode Island's First District "repudiation of the New Deal, lock, stock and barrel," when Sisson interrupted to say the Minnesotan's speech "sounds like something I've read before." "You're a damn liar!" Knutson retorted heatedly, but shouted again, "I withdrawn those words! I withdraw those words!"

'Relief for O'Connor.'

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S veto of a bill "for the relief of John J. O'Connor" furnished some amusement in the jaded House, the Associated Press reported.

Representative Snell, the Republican leader, said he "didn't catch the name," and made the clerk read it twice, while Chairman John J. O'Connor of the Rules Committee, and others laughed uproariously. The bill would have given the other O'Connor, who lives in Natick, Mass., an honorable discharge from the Army. He was "discharged without honor" because, the President's message said, he concealed the fact that he was married when he joined the Army, and left his wife without making proper provision for her.

Rockville Traffic Fuss Ends When Judge Posts $3.50 Fine

A rookie policeman got results yesterday when a Rockville judge posted collateral for a traffic violation, but the jurist had the last word.

All concerned proclaimed the incident closed when Judge Harold C. Smith avoided formal arrest and trial by sending $3.50 to police headquarters through his lawyer, Vivian Simpson.

Judge Smith then dictated a statement defending his conduct and blaming his tribulations on "animosity."

The statement:

"I have posted collateral of $3.50 for parking overtime. I feel that there has been a great deal of unnecessary animosity and persistence in the pressing of this charge. I wish to say that I, as the police justice for Montgomery County, am as amenable to the law as any layman. This applies to the parking ordinance of Rockville as well as to any other laws.

"I hope that it will not be necessary in the future for me to stop court proceedings to move my car to avoid being served with a ticket.

"I think that there should be some provision made for the county officials so that they could park on the streets without being molested.

"It is necessary for the officials to be in the courthouse all day and it is difficult for them to properly carry out their duties if they must leave every two hours to move their cars.

"I am glad the incident is over."

Leslie B. Thompson, the policeman who obeyed instructions to correct parking evils "without fear or favor" by tagging the judge's machine, maintained discreet silence over the turn of events.

Bank Conferees Make Progress On Differences

Final Agreement Early Next Month Regarded as Urobability.

By the Associated Press.

After four days of arguments, conferees on the banking bill yesterday reported considerable headway in composing differences. Final agreement early next week was regarded as probable.

One senate conferee announced the House committee had accepted several important senate provisions, including those calling for a seven-man Federal Reserve Board, with the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency excluded as ex-officio members in 90 days.

The present board is composed of six appointive members and the two ex-officio members eliminated by the Senate to make the board more "independent."

Would Change Name.

Another Senate provision said to have been accepted would change the name of the board to a "Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System," and give each member the title of "governor." The chairman and vice chairman would be selected from the seven for four-year terms. All seven would serve 14-year terms on the board.

Still another would permit a director of a reserve member bank to serve as director on "one other" bank.

The conferees were reported to be practically agreed on the Senate provision making the assessment on banks for membership in the deposit insurance fund one-twelfth of 1 per cent a year on total deposits.

Other Controversies.

Important controversies remaining to be settled were:

Constitution of the open market (credit control) committee. The House bill places this control in the Reserve Board, with a five-man Reserve bank committee acting only in an advisory capacity. The Senate bill would place the seven Reserve Board members and five Reserve bank representatives on the open market committee, giving the latter the right to vote.

Whether State banks with deposits of $1,000,000 or more should be required to join the Reserve System by July 1, 1937, in order to retain deposit insurance, as provided in the Senate bill. The House bill carries no such compulsion.

Whether banks of deposit shall be permitted to return to the business of underwriting securities. The Senate measure grants this permission and the House bill does not. President Roosevelt is opposed to the grant.

Sister of Berlin Killed in Fall

Mrs. Sarah Henkin Falls Off Apartment Roof.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 9.—Mrs. Sarah Henkin, 48, a sister of Irving Berlin, song writer, fell to her death today from the roof of her apartment, where she was taking a prescribed sun-bath treatment for asthma.

Ben Bloom, Berlin's secretary, said that Mrs. Henkin had attempted to open a steamer chair on the roof without assistance.

Suddenly the chair jerked open, Mrs. Henkin lost her balance and teetered off a parapet, plunging four floors to the street.

Her husband, Alexander, said that Mrs. Henkin had suffered from asthma for 20 years and was not strong. From his apartment window he saw her body plummet to the street.

High Points in Social Measure

Following are the principal provisions of the social security program approved by Congress and sent to the White House.

1. A bipartisan social security board of three members to administer the program, independent of the Labor Department. Members appointed by President at $10,000 yearly salary.

2. Grants to States for pensions to needy old persons, over 65. Federal grants would be made on a 50-50 matching basis with the States, except the Government's share in no case would exceed $15 monthly. Federal appropriation of $49,750,000 for 1936 fiscal year.

3. Contributory old-age annuities, ranging from $10 to $85 monthly, depending on wages and length of employment. Pensions to be paid only in event of retirement on reaching 65. Farm labor, domestics, Government employes and casual labor excluded. Pay roll tax ultimately totaling 6 per cent and saddled equally upon employer and employe, would finance the plan. Tax would begin at 1 per cent in 1937 and increase by gradual steps until it reached 3 per cent in 1949.

4. Federal fostering of State unemployment insurance plans, by Federal grants in aid, and imposition of uniform pay roll tax on employers. On and after January 1, 1936, the excise pay roll tax would be 1 per cent, rising to 2 per cent in 1937 and to 3 per cent in 1938 and thereafter. Employers of eight or more persons for any 20 weeks in year would be taxed. Federal Government allows up to 90 per cent credit to employers who pay taxes into strictly State funds. States allowed wide freedom of choice in setting up own insurance plans. A Federal subsidy of $4,000,000 in 1936 and $49,000,000 subsequently to assist States in administering laws.

5. Grants to States for aid to the needy blind, the States to have right to determine if only "permanently" blind, would benefit. Grants, not exceeding $15 monthly on a 50-50 matching basis, would be made to States meeting set standards. Federal appropriation of $3,000,000 to launch program, and "necessary" amounts thereafter.

6. Financial aid to States for carrying out State plans to help dependent children. Grants on a one-third matching basis, but in no case would the Government pay more than $6 for any single dependent child.

7. Grants to States to aid them in extension and improvement of services for promoting health of mothers and children. Some grants would be allotted equally among the States, some according to the number of births, some on the basis of need. All allotments on the basis of need would be under a 50-50 matching system. States would be aided in extending medical, surgical and corrective services for crippled children. Children's Bureau would cooperate with State public welfare agencies. Federal disbursements for vocational education of the physically disabled would be nearly doubled. Appropriation of $3,800,000 a year to aid mothers and children; $2,850,000 a year for medical care of crippled children; $1,500,000 to aid State child welfare agencies, while $841,000 would be appropriated in 1936 and 1937 and $1,938,000 thereafter, to supplement State rehabilitation of the physically disabled.

8. Appropriation of $8,000,000 annually to help States in maintaining adequate public health services. Allotments would be made by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service on the basis of population, special health problems and financial need. Additional fund provided to aid Public Health Service in investigating disease, problems of sanitation, and in co-operating with State health authorities.

Scientist Tells How to Predict Earthquakes

Startling Revelations Amo Startling Revelations Are Among Features Offered

Will men ever learn to predict, accurately, earthquakes, thus saving hundreds of lives and millions of dollars in property loss? That question, asked of bearded scientists scores of time, used to bring smiles and shrugging shoulders, because, the scientists patiently explained, all science could do about earthquakes was to register their intensity, study the tremors, and, after the quake was over, tell the world how the temblor had behaved and to what degree.

Then young Reuben Greenspan, a New York navigator, began predicting earthquakes. That was last May. With uncanny accuracy he forecast not one, but 14 earthquakes, including the recent Indian disaster which claimed 30,000 lives. Now science is beating a path to his door, for Greenspan, with little apparatus, has accomplished the seemingly impossible.

The story of this man, the theory he gives of earthquakes and the methods he uses to forecast accurately temblors in all parts of the earth, is thrillingly told by Frank Zala in the Science Page of tomorrow's Washington Post.

Gen. Williams' Ouster Ordered By Roosevelt

Clemency Denied Army Officer Convicted in $2,000 'Loan' Affair.

A court-martial verdict of guilty in the case of Brig. Gen. Alexander E. Williams, former assistant to the quartermaster general of the Army, calling for the veteran officer's dismissal from the military service, was approved yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Late in May a military tribunal found Williams, holder of the Distinguished Service Medal for exceptionally meritorious service in France and the Silver Star for gallantry in Cuba, guilty of "soliciting and obtaining a loan of $2,300 from the representative of an automobile tube concern whom he knew was attempting to favorably interest him in this tube in order to secure War Department contracts."

The nine generals composing the board, which met at the War College here, also found him guilty of "giving false testimony, by denying the loan, before sub-committee No. 3 of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House." Gen. Williams was acquitted of a third charge of "alleging the receipt of another sum of $2,000."

Case Is Closed.

The findings of the court-martial went to the judge advocate general and to a special Army board for review. Later they were forwarded to the Secretary of War and finally to the President, who yesterday closed the case with his approval of the findings.

With his dismissal from the Army, Williams loses his right to his retired pay, which would have amounted to $4,500 a year. He had served 37 years of active duty and was eligible for voluntary retirement in 1928.

The court-martial trying Gen. Williams had recommended clemency "on account of the long and faithful service." The officers conducting the trial were:

Maj. Gens. Malin Craig, commandant of the Army War College; Edward Croft, the chief of Infantry; Edward Markham, the chief of Engineers; Leon Kromer, the chief of Cavalry; William Tschappat, chief of ordnance, and Brig. Gens. Perry Miles, commanding the Sixteenth Brigade; Creed Cox, chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs; Edgar T. Conley, assistant to the adjutant general, and Edward M. Shinkle, assistant to the chief of ordnance.

Col. McNeil Law Member.

Lieut. Col. Edwin C. McNeil served as the law member of the court. Maj. F. Granville Munson was trial judge advocate and Col. William McCammon was military defense counsel with J. Leonard Townsend civilian defense counsel.

Gen. Williams was born in Linden, N. C., in 1875. He entered West Point in 1894, graduating in 1898. Upon graduation he was commissioned in the infantry, later transferring to the Quartermaster Corps. He was a member of the General Staff Corps eligible list and was a graduate of a number of schools, including the Army War College, class of 1923.

The Army court-martial conducting the trial had no alternative on finding Gen. Williams guilty except to recommend his dismissal. The President has this discretion, but despite the court's recommendations for clemency he refused to commute the sentence.

Sebastian Case Up.

The President is expected to take final action within a few days on the case in which Lieut. Henry A. Sebastian, former West Point football star, was ordered dismissed from the service for marrying Harriet Hagman, a Broadway dancer, under an assumed name while he was still a cadet at the Military Academy.

Maj. Gen. Lucius I. Holbrook, commander of the First Division in New York, has forwarded court-martial findings of guilty and sentence of dismissal to the War Department.

Secretary Dern is preparing the department's recommendation before submitting the case to the President.

Dismissal Ordered

Fire Menaces Boston Docks

Boston, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Boston waterfront was threatened for a time this afternoon, as fire of undetermined origin broke out in the Quincy cold storage plant, a huge brick structure. Fire apparatus from all sections of the city brought the flames under control with the aid of fireboats. Fire Chief Henry Fox estimated the damage at $40,000.

President Asks Consent Law For Oil Pacts

Message to Congress on Conservation Leaves Thomas Critical.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt asked Congress in a 150-word message yesterday to consent to State compacts to conserve oil and gas.

Supporters of pending oil legislation said the President also would like to see final action on a broad program which would include creation of a Federal Petroleum Board.

Expressing surprise that the message mentioned only the compacts, despite a recent White House conference at which all sides agreed to the broader program, Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, said:

"If that's all he wants, that's all he will get."

The President transmitted a certified copy of the State compact executed at Dallas February 16, 1935, by Oklahoma, Texas, California and New Mexico.

He also submitted a report from the Department of State showing the compact already had been ratified by six of the score or more producing States—New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado and Texas.

"I recommend," the message concluded, "that the Congress enact legislation giving the consent of Congress to the State compact to conserve oil and gas, executed at Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935."

Representative Cole (Democrat), Maryland, head of a special subcommittee which worked out proposed legislation acceptable in most major respects to the White House, said he thought Senate action should come first. Thomas said this would be sought at the first opportunity.

Both Cole and Representative Disney (Democrat), Oklahoma, a leader in the movement for oil legislation this session, predicted the House would approve the measure, despite opposition from some oil companies and others. At Austin, Tex., Gov. James V. Allred said creation of a Federal board "would be an entering wedge for Federal control."

Kansas City, Aug. 9 (AP).—President Roosevelt's request today for oil-control legislation at this session of Congress evoked enthusiasm in Oklahoma, opposition in Texas, and indifference in California, the three major producing States.

"That's fine, great, now we are batting," commented Gov. E. W. Marland of Oklahoma when informed the President had recommended approval of an interstate oil-control compact.

However, Gov. James V. Allred of Texas said he was "unalterably opposed" to setting up a Federal oil supervisory board in the Interior Department.

California is in the role of an onlooker, said State Umpire J. R. Pemberton, since the last Legislature "refused to ratify a State compact of any character and declined to enact any regulatory legislation."

Filene Progressing.

Moscow, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Edward A. Filene, Boston merchant and philanthropist, today progressed in his battle against lobar pneumonia. Dr. Fritz Meyer, Berlin specialist, who flew to attend Filene, said his pulse is stronger. The crisis has not yet been reached, however.

Oil Message

The President's message to Congress yesterday on oil legislation follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a certified copy of the State Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas, executed in the City of Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935, by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California and New Mexico, as recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas and Michigan.

The compact signed by representatives of these States has been deposited in the Department of State of the United States.

I also transmit a report of the Secretary of State, from which you will observe that notification has been receive dby the Department of State of the ratification of the compact by the legislatures of the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Colorado and Texas.

I recommend that the Congress enact legislation giving the consent of Congress to the State Compact to Conserve Oil and Gas, executed at Dallas, Tex., on February 16, 1935.

Injunction Suit Attacks SEC, Calls Act Invalid

Oklahoma Dealers in Oil Royalties Challenge Constitutionality.

By the Associated Press.

Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 9.—The Securities Exchange Commission was attacked by Oklahoma oil royalties dealers today in a suit charging the act creating the commission is unconstitutional. The suit was filed in United States District Court by R. R. Crawford, Tulsa dealer. He said it was supported by a group of dealers in royalties.

Seeking an injunction to prevent enforcement of commission regulations, the suit contends:

That SEC regulations conflict with a State law, that the commission resorts to subterfuge in attempting to enforce its rulings, and that Congress exceeded its authority in granting powers to the commission.

Federal Judge Franklin E. Kennamer was out of the city. No action was taken on the petition for an injunction.

The suit sets forth that oil royalties are not securities and are not subject to regulation as securities, because an Oklahoma law defines them as real estate instruments in that they are a part of the land on which the royalty is sold.

It also is contended that the purpose of the securities act is not to regulate interstate communication or commerce, but that the commission is attempting to do that by refusing to permit those who do not abide by its regulations to use the mails and telephone and telegraph facilities in transacting their business.

Death Sentence Advocate May Attack Enemy

Senator Wheeler Threatens to Invade Oklahoma on Labor Day.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, leading Senate pleader for abolishing public utility holding companies, tentatively decided yesterday to invade the district of the proposal's chief House opponent.

Wheeler said he would deliver a Labor Day address in Birmingham, Ala., home of Representative Huddleston, unless Congress adjourns in time for him to spend the holiday in Montana. The two were in grim and sometimes angry disagreement over the utilities bill for weeks.

Meanwhile the Senate lobby committee dug up a telegram in which Howard C. Hopson, missing utilities executive, expressed his exuberance over House action rejecting holding company dissolution and his enthusiastic confidence that prospects were bright for defeating the entire bill.

It was dispatched from New York City at 5 p. m., Eastern daylight time, July 1, a few hours after the House vote. The committee would not disclose to whom the message was sent, but it was assumed it went to another utilities executive associated with him in the campaign against the bill.

The Senate group and the House Rules Committee, also investigating efforts to influence action on the bill, have been seeking Hopson for weeks. He was reported in Washington for a short time early this week, but he could not be found.

Whether or not the row over the utilities bill motivated Wheeler's decision to speak in Huddleston's district was not made clear.

The conferees on the holding company bill reported progress after two sessions yesterday and said they expected to reach the section for abolition of some holding companies next week.

A Dueling Burglar.

Thieves who broke into a trailer belonging to Earl Lunsford, 635 H street northeast, escaped with two dueling pistols, two swords, two daggers and three Philadelphia police batons, it was reported to police yesterday. Lunsford said they were worth $25.

It was assumed that Administration spokesmen on the Finance Committee would make a hard fight to write into the bill the corporate income tax schedule proposed by the President, ranging from 10¾ to 16¾ per cent. The rates adopted by the House ranged from 13¼ to 14¼ per cent. At present the rate on corporation income is 13¾ per cent, irrespective of size or amount, with an added 2 per cent on consolidated returns.

One member of the committee, before the executive sessions started predicted that the bill when it is reported by the Finance Committee would resemble more the schedules projected by that group on June 25 than it would the bill passed by the House.

The rates tentatively sponsored by the Finance Committee on that date, when an effort was being made to make the "share-the-wealth" program a rider to a resolution extending nuisance taxes, were vastly different from those approved by the House, but they would produce, it was estimated, less than $100,000,000 in revenue, compared with estimated revenue of $270,000,000 under the measure now pending.

The so-called Finance Committee schedules did not increase surtaxes on any income of less than $1,000,000, whereas the House increases start at incomes of $50,000. The Finance Committee schedule would not tax any inheritance of less than $300,000. But it also included a graduated corporation tax which would range from 10 to 17½ per cent.

As forecast at the Finance Committee hearings, the inheritance tax section is causing the group the greatest difficulty. It is known that some members believe that an inheritance tax, on top of the existing Federal estate levies, would be economically unsound and do untold damage to American industry.

They are not so much concerned about the man who owns $10,000,000 of real estate or has that sum widely diversified in securities. Such a case does not present difficulties that would rebound against the national industrial structure, although it might cause injustices to his heirs.

But there appears to be developing real concern about the case of a man who has all or the major part of his fortune in one business—and there are said to be thousands of such cases—or the rich man who is the sole proprietor of a sizable business property.

The proposed inheritance taxes, plus the existing estate taxes, it has been demonstrated, would take so large a share of such estates that it would be necessary for the heirs to issue securities, and thus lose control of the property, to get sufficient funds to meet the levies.

The case of the Ford Motor Co. is the most discussed example of the effect of the proposed inheritance rates. It has been demonstrated that this property would pass into the hands of multiple owners after Henry Ford's death as a result of the inheritance taxes. It is argued that so well has the Ford family served the social and economic welfare of the country that any disintegration of that family's control would be for the worse, from any viewpoint of the situation.

All this was argued before the Finance Committee and forcefully presented to the Senate Thursday by Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, and apparently it has had some effect, although it is not known whether a majority of the Finance Committee have reached the conclusion to oppose an inheritance tax in its entirety.

Social Measure Passes Senate; Awaits Signing

This provision in the act is designed to support people now old and dependent. To provide more liberally for younger persons now in industry, and to assure support for the aged as a "right" rather than a public charity, another title in the act sets up a national system of compulsory contributory old-age pensions for persons under 65, financed equally by employers and employes, with each ultimately paying 3 per cent of employes' salaries into a Government fund.

It is estimated that by 1950 some 25,000,000 workers would be covered by this contributory pension plan. By that time, the tax will yield about $2,000,000,000 annually, and by 1980 the fund would reach the huge accumulated total of $50,000,000,000.

Agricultural, domestic, Government and casual workers would be excluded from participation under this plan. A worker must retire in order to receive the pension, and must have received a total of $2,000 in wages. Pensions would depend on wages and years of employment.

Average monthly salary (dollars)	Years of employment 10	20	30	40
50	$17.50	$22.50	$27.50	$32.50
100	22.50	32.50	42.50	51.25
150	27.50	42.50	53.75	61.25

State co-operation is the watchword of the program, and to get this potent lures are held out, as in the case of the unemployment insurance scheme, which allows 90 per cent credits to employers from the 3 per cent unemployment insurance pay roll tax, where local industries contribute to State job insurance systems.

Although the unemployment insurance tax is paid in to the Federal Government, the burden of establishing an unemployment insurance scheme is placed wholly upon the States. The States, in turn, would be permitted freedom of choice in selecting a plan, whether of the Wisconsin type (where the contributions of each employer are segregated, and payments of compensation therefrom are made only to workmen of these particular employes), or the pooled type of insurance (in which all contributions are mingled and from which payments are made to unemployed workmen without reference to the employer for whom they work).

Before the compulsory provisions of the old-age pension plan go into effect, further legislation unboubtedly will be enacted exempting from taxation employers and employes under private pension systems. An exemption proviso of this type was approved by the Senate, but rejected in conference when it threatened to tie up negotiations indefinitely. A joint committee of both houses was appointed instead to work out the details. Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), Missouri, author of the plan, who called at the White House yesterday, expressed confidence an agreement will be reached, probably next session, on this point.

There is no provision for so-called "health insurance" in the act. That also is left for the future. Medical groups now are cooperating with the Government on the course of such legislation-to-be.

Although Congress yesterday spryly leaped this major hurdle in the path of adjournment, new barriers loomed in the form of an unexpectedly hard fight on the Welsh bill to impose minimum wage and hour restrictions on Government contractors.

Fighting to defeat the Walsh measure, Senator Clark introduced the Black 30-hour week bill as a substitute, and Huey Long threatened to offer the $3,000,000,000 inflationary Frazier-Lemke bill as a rider.

Leaders were confident of a vote early next week on the measure, however, following an unanimous consent agreement yesterday limiting debate. Although the 30-hour week bill would stand a strong chance of passage ordinarily by a Senate that has approved it in principle once before, leaders predicted it would be defeated as a substitute for the Walsh bill.

A personal clash between Clark and Senator David I. Walsh, who charged the Missourian was seeking by indirection to defeat his measure, marked yesterday's debate.

As conference progress was reported yesterday on a broad front, an agreement on the controversial banking bill loomed by next Tuesday, and Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, disclosed that he had a new utilities bill compromise ready, retaining many of the features of the utility bill "death sentence."

Under the motor carrier bill signed yesterday by the President, the Interstate Commerce Commission after October 1 will take over regulation of all common and contract motor vehicle carriers engaged in transporting passengers and property interstate. Exemptions are provided for vehicles exclusively carrying livestock, fish or agricultural products, as are trucks distributing newspapers, or those operated by farm co-operatives.

Danube Treaty Drafted, Goes to 8 Powers Soon

Non-Aggression Pledges in Proposed Pact; Basis for Conference.

By the United Press.

Rome, Aug. 9.—A Danube pact pledging signatories to mutual non-aggression by land and air was drafted today. It will be submitted to France, Italy, Austria, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Yugoslavia and Rumania for final examination shortly.

The proposed pact consists of six articles:

1—Pledging signatories to maintain mutual good relations in a spirit of confidence and collaboration.

2—Pledging signatories to non-aggression by land and air.

3—Providing agreement not to interfere in the internal affairs of another signatory. Pledging mutual recognition of sovereignty and promising not to support or tolerate action aimed against the independence or social or political regimes of signatories.

4—Providing obligation to refuse assistance to any state failing to observe the conditions stipulated by the pact.

5—Providing for consultations among signatories regarding application of the treaty.

6—Stipulating agreement to acknowledge obligations and rights of signatories as members of the League of Nations.

Signatories would be forbidden to assume responsibilities contrary to obligations of the accord, which does not provide for rearmament of the Danube states nor conclusion of a mutual assistance pact. Both of the latter will be treated in special conference.

It is not expected the Balkan states will participate in the Danube conference, scheduled to approve the draft pact completed today.

projected 8,500-mile air route from California to China.

Over Golden Gate, however, and as far out as Farallone Islands, 30 miles off the Gate, a dense fog rolled. Some 40 ships of the United States Fleet were tied up outside the Gate, unable to move through the blinding shroud.

The Clipper headed over the fog, then straight along its course to Honolulu, 2,400 miles distant, first stopping point on the flight to Wake.

In command of the plane for the current hop, which will take the Clipper past the international date line and "over the hump" of the transpacific route, was R. O. D. Sullivan, first officer on previous round-trip flights to Honolulu and Midway Islands.

With Sullivan were J. H. Tilton, first officer; M. G. Weber, junior flight officer; Citor A. Wright, engineering officer; W. Turner Jarboe, jr., radio officer; Fred H. Noonan, navigator, and H. R. Canaday, assistant navigator. Tilton and Weber were newcomers to the crew.

At Honolulu Philip Verst, assistant engineering officer, will join the Clipper and fly to Wake. Weather facing the giant Sikorsky plane was reported favorable along most of the route.

Juneau, Alaska, Aug. 9.—Wiley Post and Will Rogers, the "flying vacationists," bade farewell to newly made friends in Juneau at 1:25 p. m. (4:25 p. m., Eastern standard time) today, stepped into the monoplane and hopped off on the second lap of their Alaska tour.

Post said he was going to Dawson, Yukon Territory, perhaps by way of Skagway. Dawson is 47 air miles north of this city.

Among those at the wharf was Rex Beach, noted author, who said "Good luck and good-bye."

Before taking off, the fliers said their stay in Dawson would be indefinite. From Dawson they are expected to follow the Yukon River to Fairbanks and then go to Nome.

Feudal Chiefs Ride in to Receive Sealed Orders From Selassie

Rases (Tribal Heads) Will Bear Initial Brunt If War Comes.

By Edward W. Beattie.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Aug. 9.—Ethiopian potentates, escorted by armed retinues, came to Addis Ababa today to receive from Emperor Haile Selassie the orders which will send their troops into battle if the threatened Italian invasion materializes when the rains stop next month.

Territories bordering Eritrea and Italian Somaliland will be guarded in the initial stages of the war by troops commanded by rases (tribal chiefs). The rases march in steady procession to the imperial palace for sealed orders from their supreme commander.

Ethiopian officials estimated Italy has concentrated 100,000 troops on the Eritrea frontier and 50,000 in Italian Somaliland. But the European army has not yet been mobilized.

The Conquering Lion of Judah has collected troops in considerable numbers at only four points. Officials said only skeleton forces are within 100 miles of the border because Ethiopia is determined to avoid blame for possible frontier incidents.

Ethiopia's military preparations proceed with utmost secrecy. Haile Selassie keeps his modern, imperial army out of general view of the public. His government declines all requests for military information.

His commissary is busy filling food and ammunition dumps at strategic places. Special attention is given to warehouses storing food. Commanders said a shortage of food in war time might mean disintegration of the Emperor's feudal levies.

Ras Kassa, of Gondar, one of the most powerful feudal chiefs, reportedly has collected 80,000 troops which, in event of war, will guard the easiest approach to the Addis Ababa plateau—along the gradient leading to Lake Tsana.

Other concentrations in Tigre province are controlled by Ras Siyoum, reputedly the most warlike of all the rases. Tigre military operations are based for defense of the Adowa plateau. Smaller numbers of troops under Ras Bali are guarding the Webbe and Shibeli districts of Harrar, the gateway to Ogaden through which Italian forces are expected to attack.

In Addis Ababa there is little sign of possible conflict as the populace awaits the end of the rainy season. Until then war can not start.

Amended Ship Bill Reported to Senate

Murphy Corrects 'Joker' Seen in Subsidy Act.

By the Associated Press.

The revived ship subsidy bill was reported out yesterday by the Senate Commerce Committee—with an amendment.

Although the measure is only two days old, Senator Murphy (Democrat), of Iowa, sensed what he termed a "joker." He put forward an amendment which would permit subsidized shipowners to base earnings only on their own investment in a ship, rather than on its total cost.

Otherwise the bill remained largely the same as it emerged after a month of conferences directed by an interdepartmental committee which sought to smooth out disagreements.

Chairman Copeland (Democrat), of New York, reiterated his earlier assertions that he would not "battle" for the bill unless Administration leaders in the Senate called it up.

Peace Society Urges U. S. Act To Boycott Italy

Says Kellogg Pact Obligates Nations to Act Against 'Aggressor.'

By the Associated Press.

Economic measures against Italy as an aggressor nation were called for yesterday in a petition sent to Secretary Hull by the committee on international law of the Catholic Association for International Peace.

Declaring that "Ethiopia has made every possible effort to obtain a peaceful solution, while Italy has spoken in terms of conquest and has tried to frustrate the collective opinion of the community of nations," the committee's petition recommends "constructive action" by the United States.

Statements on the Italo-Ethiopian crisis already made by President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull, the committee declared, do not go far enough toward carrying out American obligations to the Pact of Paris.

"We are not prepared to advocate the extreme remedy of resort to international force," the petition said, but added the United States "must support its policy of consultation by an agreement to take economic measures against a nation flagrantly violating the Kellogg Pact."

The committee suggested "the United States call for a conference of all the nations that signed the Kellogg Pact" to plan "an international boycott against any nation found, after consultation, to have violated its agreement to use only peaceful means to settle its disputes."

the tariffs, much in the manner of Great Britain.

Police searched houses in Toulon and arrested 40 persons. They discovered a "regular arsenal" in one house and found many wounded. The "arsenal" included sub-machine guns.

The French Line agreed to compensate sailors for their wage cuts. This enabled the Champlain to sail and the Columbia and Lafayette to depart on schedule.

Government authorities confidently predicted there would be no further disorders.

Agitators, whom conservative organs called Communists, were officially blamed for riots in Toulon and Brest after an investigation. "A clear distinction should be made between rioters and arsenal workers who intended a demonstration against the decree laws," officials said.

Toulon was reported quiet tonight and most citizens observed the 9 o'clock curfew imposed by the mayor "until normal life returns." The streets were virtually deserted except for a heavy force of guards.

Chain Letters Urge Italian Boycott

London, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—The chain-letter craze spread to England today with appearance of serial correspondence urging the world's housewives to boycott Italian goods to prevent war in East Africa.

Lady Frieda, wife of Percy Alfred Harris, liberal member of Parliament, started the letter, not so much in sympathy for Ethiopia, but as a protest against war generally.

Japanese Seek To Wrest Auto Plants' Control

Dominating U. S. Firms Vitally Affected by Defense Move.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, Aug. 9.—The Japanese government moved today to secure control of the automobile industry in this country, dominated by American firms. Its importance to national defense was stressed by War Minister Senjuro Hayashi who urged the action.

The cabinet's draft of an automotive industry control law, approved unanimously, will be presented to Parliament early next year.

American interests will be vitally affected by the measure. The General Motors and Ford plants in the last five years have turned out approximately 80 per cent of the automobiles sold in Japan, some 10,000 apiece each year.

Under the cabinet proposal companies must be licensed and subjected to government control, with a majority of the stock owned by Japanese. The proposed law will not be retroactive. It said the "vested rights" of foreign companies "will be respected."

Any future expansion by such companies falls under the law's provisions, which apparently blocks the Ford plans for a new factory at Yokohomo unless the majority of the shares are Japanese owned.

Financial writers said the cabinet action paved the way for consolidation of General Motors with the Japan Industry Co., a holding company, and predicted Japanese would hold majority stock in the consolidated businesses.

The ministry of commerce said foreign-owned assembly plants make almost all passenger cars in Japan and that it would be impossible for this country to establish a national motor industry unless it were given adequate protection.

A similar measure has placed the oil and petroleum industry under government control. This seriously affected the Standard Vacuum Co. America and Japan have exchanged diplomatic notes over the situation without reaching an agreement.

Detroit Interested

Detroit, Aug. 9 (AP).—Leaders of the automotive industry here expressed considerable interest in the move of the Japanese government to obtain control over the production of motor cars in that country, but withheld comment for the time being.

"We will have no comment," it was stated at the offices of the Ford Motor Co., "until we have been officially notified of the terms of the proposed control law."

Because more than 72 per cent of the world's motor cars are registered in the United States, the industry generally has looked to development of the foreign field as offering the greatest opportunity for expansion.

Aged Fisherman Dies; Was Monarch's Friend

Eastbourne, England, Aug. 9 (AP).—"Dusty" Matthews, 86-year-old colorful retired fisherman who was a friend of King George, died today.

When the old tar saw the King and Queen taking a stroll here last spring, he lustily shook hands with the monarch, asserting: "I'm pleased to meet you, captain, I knew your mum and dad."

China's Premier Resigns Post In Ill Health

Officials Seek Return of Wang Ching-Wei, Veteran Leader.

By the Associated Press.

Nanking, Aug. 9.—On the heels of the resignation today of China's premier and foreign minister, Wang Ching-Wei, officials of the National government took steps to persuade him to change his mind and remain in office.

Two high officials, one representing the government and the other the dominant Kuomintang Party, left for Tsingtao to urge Wang to withdraw his resignation.

Ill-health was given as the reason for the 50-year-old leader's action.

(The Rengo — Japanese — News Agency in Tokyo said Wang had been criticized bitterly recently for alleged pro-Japanese sympathies.)

At Tsingtao Wang remained inaccessible at the home of the Governor of Shantung Province. Only his personal physician and a few government associates were permitted to enter the premises. Wang became premier January 29, 1932.

Finance Minister H. H. King accepted the acting premiership and Vice Foreign Minister Hsumo took over the foreign office duties.

Wang's telegram explained that he was suffering from gall trouble and that the work of the premiership induced headaches.

Wang, 50, is a celebrated Chinese revolutionist and a veteran member of the Kuomintang Party. He first came into international prominence through an attempt to assassinate the prince regent, father of the youthful Manchu Emperor, Hsuan Tung. Wang was condemned to life imprisonment, but was released after the 1911 outbreak of revolution.

He was educated in Canton—where he became a radical opponent of the monarchy—in Tokyo and in France. He joined the southern government at Canton in 1921.

After a violent disagreement with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek several years ago, he was expelled from the Nationalistic Party and became an influential leader in an opposition government at Canton. Later he made up with the Nanking government.

President Roosevelt boarded the yacht Sequoia at Annapolis at 8:15 p. m. yesterday for a week-end cruise down Chesapeake Bay.

He was accompanied by Senator and Mrs. James Byrne (Democrat), South Carolina; Senator Alben Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky; Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, Miss Marguerite Lehand, his personal secretary, and Capt. Wilson Brown, senior White House naval aid.

Leaders Press For Enactment Of Guffey Bill

Completion of Congressional Action Week After Next Slated.

By the Associated Press.

New Deal chiefs set out yesterday to jam the controverted Guffey coal stabilization bill to final passage before Congress adjourns.

Some sizable obstacles still stood in the way, but the tentative schedule was for the House to pass the "little NRA" measure next week and the Senate the week after.

Administration backers on the House Ways and Means Committee neared success in their week-long effort to break the deadlock which had held the bill in that committee. Even opponents conceded that a committee vote planned for Monday would push the measure toward floor consideration.

The bill would set up a national bituminous coal commission to regulate wages, hours, trade practices and prices in the soft coal industry through a tax on operators.

To make sure they were not working for nothing, committee Democrats sent a special sub-committee over to talk with Senate leaders about what would happen to the bill there. Subsequently, Chairman Doughton (Democrat), North Carolina, of the House committee, reported the Senate situation "satisfactory."

"There had been some talk to the effect that the Senate might not get a chance to consider the bill in the adjournment rush even if the House passed it," he asserted. "We were assured that the Senate will have that opportunity."

Doughton and the Ways and Means Democrats conferred with Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader, and Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, of the Senate Finance Committee.

One possible remaining obstacle was the House itself, where a poll of sentiment had raised grave doubts as to whether the bill could muster a majority on the floor with most Republicans against it. Late returns, however, increased the favorable majority.

Britain Ready To Send Arms If Peace Fails

lent here, however, that the new conversations would prove no more conclusive than those at Geneva.

Informed circles tonight scoffed at the possibility that other parties to the peace treaty of 1906—France and England—might satisfy Italy's East African ambitions by economic concessions, and asserted economic clauses contained in the treaty of friendship with Ethiopia in 1928 "had never been validated."

Newspapers reported prominently the crash of the large plane near Cairo yesterday and said the victims "have not fallen in vain."

The Giornale d'Italia pointed out that one of the victims, Luigi Razza, minister of public works, was en route to Eritrea "to organize public works which would make more secure an East Africa, which must be opened to Italian labor and civilization."

It also pointed out that another of those killed, Raimondo Franchetti, an explorer, was "one of the pioneers of Italy in Africa and explored those territories which must be opened to our works." (Franchetti was an authority on the Ethiopian hinterland.)

Full state honors were ordered for Razza and his companions by Mussolini. The crash was viewed with concern, as the plane was of the type designed for general East African service.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Aug. 9.—A one-man Ethiopian mission hastened toward Japan tonight, presumably in an effort to secure credits for the purchase of war supplies, another indication of the developing bonds between the two countries.

He was Daba Birrou, former foreign office official, who departed on his secret trip accompanied by an unidentified Japanese.

News of their departure led to speculation as to whether Emperor Haile Selassie, cut off from the remainder of the industrial world, was turning to oriental friends for arms, money and provisions sorely needed to prepare the country for an expected conflict with Italy.

It was said Birrou would attempt to gain at least 50 per cent credit from Japan for the expected purchases. This made observers wonder if the Emperor and the Japanese had worked out a secret understanding for Japanese economic expansion in Ethiopia and the safeguarding of any capital Japan may stake on the side of Ethiopia.

Japan has announced plans of establishing a legation here, possibly by January 1. Birrou, it was said, may establish an Ethiopian legation in Tokyo.

[A foreign office spokesman in Tokyo said that outbreak of an Italo-Ethiopian war before the end of the year might compel postponement of the establishment of a Japanese legation at Addis Ababa.]

The Emperor's war council, confronted by stocks of only about 11,000,000 rounds of ammunition, was reported to have decided upon the sternest measures for their conservation.

Informed quarters said a plan of strategy has been worked out by which the Ethiopians would resort to guerrilla warfare in the mountains, constantly harassing the enemy, especially at night. They will attempt to wear down the expected Roman legions, while Nature, in the form of burning sands, little water and the roughest terrain, is expected to aid the Africans.

Birrou left by train for Djibouti, French Somaliland, where he expects to sail direct to Kobe on a French steamer.

British representatives disclosed today preliminary plans for protection of their nationals and other Europeans under their wing in Ethiopia in the event of an Italian invasion or internal disorders.

More than a month after the United States advised all Americans to leave the country, Great Britain through its legation here, took similar precautions, but recommended only that women and children be evacuated.

Hundreds of Ethiopian women aristocrats, including several princesses, held another patriotic demonstration last night. Bejewelled robes of all colors were worn by the women. Men were not admitted to the hall.

nations can get along amicably is not to interfere with the interior life of each other. If the nations of the world came to realize this, there would be less economic distress and much more happiness on this earth."

The diplomat declared "the disturbances in Germany are not as great as depicted and the government is opposed to everything that is done by irresponsible elements."

The Ambassador was accompanied here from Germany by his two daughters, Mrs. Gertraud Luther von Haeften and Eva Marie Luther. He was met at Quarantine by Rudolph Leitner, Counselor of the German Embassy at Washington.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Aug. 9.—An order published by the peasant leader for the Free State of Brunswick indicated today that Nazi policy may now be definitely directed at depriving the Jew of doing business with Gentiles. Hitherto, Nazidom has maintained that the Jew was not to be interfered with commercially.

Gustav Giesecke, the Brunswick peasant leader, issued an order declaring: "Whoever as a German peasant engages in trade with the Jew, or otherwise maintains a connection with him, commits treason to his blood, gives comfort to the deadly enemy of the German people, the Jew."

Business Factor.

There are numerous considerations, however, which prevent an immediate realization of this "totality" program. There are internal considerations of an economic nature. For instance, Jewish business is still so vital a factor that the immediate elimination of the Jew in commercial concerns would draw in its wake the dismissal of thousands of Aryan workers.

There is, further, the feeling that a Jew who fought in the front lines for Germany, or whose father or son fell on behalf of the Reich in the World War, deserves special consideration. Not in all departments of government, however, Joseph Goebbels' ministry of propaganda does not recognize war service as an asset, as is indicated by letters from the ministry which the Associated Press correspondent had an opportunity to examine.

Just Doing His Duty.

One of these letters was a reply to an author who, on being served notice that he was fired from the Reich's culture chamber (which meant his license to write was withdrawn), appealed on the grounds that he had served in the trenches.

"You need not think," the ministry's reply read in effect, "that the mere fact of doing your duty by your country entitles you to special consideration."

There are, also, considerations of a foreign political nature. Obviously, if Germany's 600,000 full Jews and the estimated 1,500,000 half and quarter Jews are to leave Germany, some other country must take them over. But the other nations have intimated that in these times of a world depression such a large number of foreigners simply can not be absorbed.

Expediency, therefore, demands of Hitler that he proceed cautiously with his anti-Semitic program.

Save for brief reports of actions against Jews and Catholics in the provinces, newspapers turned from these worries to cheer unanimously a reduction of 122,000 in unemployment during July, to 1,754,000. This figure does not include 168,000 officially classed as "emergency workers," such as those sent to farms who are earning a pittance.

More building and improvement in some industries helped the employment situation, in addition to army recruiting and labor services. The number receiving doles was reduced by 63,000 to 904,000.

A shortage in certain food supplies led to a report high officials would meet Monday on the question.

Secret police issued a statement saying Catholic youths were responsible for a fight at Krefeld yesterday in which a group of 15-year-old Hitler youths was attacked and two were injured.

Deny Saar Controversy.

Reports from Saarbruecken indicated anti-Jewish action there in controversion of the pre-plebiscite agreement at Rome and that a new plebiscite would be asked. This was denied by Joseph Buerckel, governor of the Saar, who said the agreement was being observed loyally and that party divisions should leave the Jewish question entirely open.

At Gruenstadt large signs were put up—"Jews not wanted here." In Windsheim the mayor forbade Aryan salesmen to deal with Jews. A demonstration took place at Pirmasens, where a Jew was accused of racial turpitude.

A Catholic priest at Fichtelberg was officially ordered to discontinue religious instruction because he allegedly incited youths against the state Nazi movement. Police ordered disbanding of a Catholic group in the Muenster district for allegedly distributing pamphlets derogatory to the Storm Troops.

Vatican City, Aug. 9.—The Vatican newspaper Osservatore Romano in a strong editorial today called Germany's sterilization decree an effort to reduce man "to a sterile beast."

It particularly singled out declarations it said were made at Essen July 3 by Dr. Wilhelm Frick, Nazi minister of interior. The Osservatore attributed to Frick this remark: "If God has created a healthy race, I believe Divine law will keep it healthy."

To this, the newspaper answered: "If God created man, we believe part of the Divine law is not to degrade him. That slavery is not only wrong when it makes a thing out of a man, but also when it makes him a sterile beast."

Rep. Truax Dies In the Capital; Ohio Lawmaker

Heart Disease Fatal to Congressman-at-Large at Age of 49.

Charles V. Truax, Democratic Representative at large from Ohio, died suddenly here yesterday. He was 49 years old.

Death was attributed to heart disease. His general physical condition had been aggravated by sinus trouble.

Mr. Truax left the House floor at 1 p. m., apparently feeling all right. He was in a state of collapse when his son John, 19, reached his apartment at 208 First street southeast shortly before 4 p. m. Physicians were summoned. The Representative died a few minutes later with John and his daughter, Dorthea, at the bedside.

Mrs. Truax, in Bucyrus, Ohio, when told of her husband's death, asked that his body be returned there. The journey will begin today.

A third child, Charles, jr., also survives.

The widow said that overwork had caused her husband's death. "Both his physicians at Washington and in Columbus had advised him to take a rest," she said.

Excessive cost of a special election may delay the filling of the post until the regular election of November, 1936, Ohio's Governor, Martin L. Davey, indicated to the Associated Press. He said he had not decided the matter.

Fought for Inflation.

A six-footer with masses of unruly black hair, Mr. Truax was known for his liberal views, his acrobatic delivery and his leather lungs. He was in the thick of every floor fight for inflation.

He often assailed the Administration's farm policies. One day recently he shouted:

"The only thing farmers are going to raise this year is dust and hell."

Then there was the time when he told the House had the Dionne quintuplets been born in this country, "Wallace would have plowed them under."

Another time he offered an amendment to a pest-fighting bill providing for extermination "of all the bugs in the AAA."

Truax was regular in his House attendance, perhaps so he would be on hand to object when some one sought to call up under unanimous consent a bill frowned on by the New Deal. He was among several members assigned by the Speaker to watch so-called private measures.

Foe of Wall Street.

Wall street was his pet bugaboo. In his unsuccessful race against former Senator Simeon D. Fess, Republican, in 1928, he often said:

"Oh, I know the big bankers will be out to get me, but Ohio's got more sensible voters than it has bankers."

As the Democratic senatorial nominee he fell before Fess and later was twice elected to the House by substantial majorities, as a member from the State at large.

Born on a farm, Mr. Truax early became interested in hog breeding. As a young man he shipped his swine as far away as Australia and Japan. He often represented Ohio governors at farm conferences, was active in the McNary-Haugen agricultural relief legislation movement and for years edited the Swine World. He formerly was Ohio State director of agriculture.

Convention Reading Clerk.

As reading clerk of the 1924 Democratic national convention he called the roll when John W. Davis received the presidential nomination on the 103d ballot.

His death reduced the House membership to 429, six short of its normal size.

Three other House members have died this session: Representatives Landis (Republican), Indiana; Griffin (Democrat), New York, and Carden (Democrat), Kentucky.

Woolavington, English Peer, Sportsman Dies

Fairy Godfather to 2 U. S. Girls Was 85; Won Derby Twice.

By the Associated Press.

Petworth, England, Aug. 9.—Lord Woolavington, wealthy distiller and prominent race-horse owner and breeder, died today after a long illness. He was 85 years old.

Lord Woolavington twice won the Derby, with Capt. Cuttle in 1922 and with Coronach in 1926.

He was chairman of James Buchanan & Co., Ltd., of London, and of W. P. Lowrie & Co., Ltd., of Glasgow.

Born in Bankell, Stirlingshire, August 16, 1849, he was married in 1892 to Miss Anne Pounder, who died in 1918. One daughter survives.

Lord Woolavington's name became well known in America in 1927 when he played the part of a fairy godfather to two Janesville, Wis., girls, Catherine and Jean Buchanan, his grandnieces. Unaware up to that time that the two granddaughters of his nephew, William, were living in comparative poverty in America, Lord Woolavington invited them to England as his guests, sent them a check for traveling expenses, entertained them for six weeks and provided for their future with a trust fund before they returned home.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 9 (AP).—Two Janesville girls, whose lives were made happier by the beneficence of Lord Woolavington, were grief-stricken when they learned of his death today. They had not known he was ill.

The girls, Catherine and Jean Buchanan, said the wealthy sportsman's last letter mentioned he was in good health. Lord Woolavington created a $150,000 trust fund for the children. Jean recently was graduated from Teachers' College. Catherine is employed in a fountain pen factory.

Bishop Calls Catholics To Shun Birth Control

St. Paul, Aug. 9 (AP).—Catholics in the St. Paul archdiocese today were ordered by Archbishop John Gregory Murray to spurn and renounce membership and employment in any organization co-operating with birth-control movements.

Writing ni the Catholic Bulletin, the archbishop instructed the clergy to announce at all masses August 18 that "hereafter no individual or group of individuals or society may accept or retain membership in any organization recognizing or supporting birth control or sterilization. Persons employed * * * must withdraw from such employment. Relief workers * * * must refuse to become agents of such anti-social and demoralizing activity."

Eagle Quartets Compete For Convention Honors

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 9 (AP).—The national convention hall of the Fraternal Order of Eagles rang tonight with melodies, old and new, as male quartets vied for honors in a contest conducted by the order.

The contest came after a day of business sessions in which delegates unanimously adopted a resolution urging President Roosevelt to lend his favorable consideration to the Ludlow bill pending in Congress.

The bill was drafted as a means of aiding in stabilizing employment and lessening the frequency of business depressions.

Dartmouth Professor Drowns in N. H. Lake

Hanover, N. H., Aug. 9 (U.P.).—A. Heywood Knowlton, professor of romance languages at Dartmouth College, was drowned late today while swimming at Lake Mascoma, 12 miles from here. An Enfield policeman recovered the body with grappling irons.

Knowlton was graduated from Dartmouth in 1917 and appointed to the faculty in 1921 after graduate study at Harvard. He was to have married Miss Marilla Hayden, of New York City, in September.

Sex Slayer's Victim Gets $920 Reward

By the Associated Press.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 9 (AP).—One of Gerald Thompson's reputed attack victims today shared one-half the reward for his capture and conviction for the sex-murder of pretty Mildred Hallmark, 19.

The girl, reputedly one of 16 victims whose name appeared in Thompson's diary recounting attacks on women, was paid $920.50. Her name was withheld. Henry Newman, who told authorities of an attack upon the daughter of a friend, received a like amount.

Two Women Slayers Leave for Life in Jail

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—Mrs. Blanche Dunkel and Mrs. Evelyn Smith, middle-aged partners in crime, left the county jail by automobile at 1:15 p. m. today to begin 180-year terms in Dwight Reformatory for slaying Ervin Lang.

The convicted killers sat in the rear of the car, a portly jail matron—Mrs. Margaret O'Toole—between them.

Johnson Plurality 942.

Jackson, Miss., Aug. 9 (AP).—The complete unofficial vote in the Mississippi Democratic gubernatorial primary gave Paul Johnson 110,207 votes, a plurality of 942 votes over his nearest opponent, Hugh White. They will enter the run-off primary August 27.

2 Youths Admit Killing to Start Crime Careers

Nonchalantly Tell Details of Holdup Murder of Day Laborer.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 9.—Two youths today confessed they shot and killed a day laborer near Peekskill, N. Y., in the first holdup of a crime career they had planned to extend to Pittsburgh and Chicago.

The youths, Peter Mohlsick, 20, and Howard Eichler, 21, both of Peekskill, were arrested two hours after the crime and taken to the Westchester County Jail at East View to await Grand Jury action on a charge of first-degree murder of Raymond H. Pierce, 23, also of Peekskill.

Prosecutors particularly were interested in reports Pierce and one of the youths had quarreled over the affections of a Peekskill girl a week ago.

Tell Details of Crime.

Near Peekskill, the confession of the youths stated, they stopped Pierce, Eichler, carrying a length of pipe, getting into the rear seat, and Mohlsick, armed with a revolver, sitting beside Pierce. Soon, the confession continued, Mohlsick poked a gun into Pierce's side and commanded him to "give us your car and your money or I'll plug you."

When Pierce jumped from the car and started to run three shots rang out and he fell to the ground.

"I knew I'd got him because I heard him scream. I knew he'd die," the confession by Mohlsick stated.

Officials said they would seek the death penalty for the prisoners. Pierce was said to have been the sole support of his parents and seven brothers and sisters.

Nonchalant Confession.

Acting Capt. Frederick Zwirz read the homicide charge which had been brought against the pair.

"What have you got to say about that?" he asked Mohlsick.

"That's right," was the reply.

"What was your motive?"

"We wanted his car to do some jobs."

"What kind of jobs?"

"Stick-ups."

Mohlsick admitted he had shot Pierce, and Zwirz asked him why.

"He resisted us," the youth said.

Subsequent questioning brought out that the pair had planned an ambitious program of robbery on the highways. They had intended to drive to Chicago and Pittsburgh, said Mohlsick.

"You intended to stick people up en route?" queried Zwirz.

"Right," Mohlsick told him.

Zwirz turned to Eichler. "You've heard what this man said?"

"Right," was the brief response.

Zenge Indictment Is Reported Ready

True Bill Expected on Monday in Bauer Case.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 9.—On the basis of what prosecutors termed one of the strongest chains of circumstantial evidence in their experience, Mandeville W. Zenge, 26, Missouri carpenter, was reported indicted today by the grand jury for the mutilation murder of his rival, Dr. Walter J. Bauer. State's attorneys indicated the true bill would be returned in Cricimal Court Monday.

Today William Leinert, a cab driver, entered the grand jury room closely guarded by detectives. Leinert was seized with Zenge 48 hours after Dr. Bauer died from a crude emasculation operation. Prosecutors said Leinert's testimony was "satisfactory."

The testimony of Mrs. Louise Schaffer Bauer, widow of the slain man and former sweetheart of his alleged slayer, was read to clarify points her near collapse left obscure in previous testimony.

John Bender, clerk of a West Side hotel where Zenge allegedly stopped before proceeding to Ann Arbor, Mich., where the victim was kidnaped, also testified. Another hotel clerk, Louis Krohn, who supposedly saw Zenge after he left a hoax suicide note in a cab at Navy pier, was another witness.

Previous witnesses told the jurors Zenge was the man who ran from the car in which Dr. Bauer was left bleeding to death, prosecutors said.

Los Angeles Man Held After Death of Wife

Los Angeles, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Robert S. James, beauty parlor proprietor, whose bride of three weeks was found dead in a fish pond three days ago, was held for investigation tonight by the sheriff's office.

Mrs. Mary James, 27-year-old beautician, was the second of James' wives to die in a strange manner. A former wife, Winona James, was found dead October 14, 1932, face down in a bathtub filled with water.

Father Frowns on Operation To Aid Crippled Son to Walk

Refuses Permission for Free Surgery; Points to Useless Braces.

By the Associated Press.

Yonkers, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Crippled Henry Spiak, 14, told by doctors that an operation would enable him to walk with a small brace, insisted tonight that "father knows best" in refusing permission for the surgery for which public agencies would defray costs.

Children's Court Judge George W. Smyth is to decide whether an operation shall be ordered performed despite opposition of the father, the boy and eight brothers and sisters in the family. The mother is dead.

Henry has had almost no schooling since he was stricken with infantile paralysis nine years ago. The boy moves about only in a little cart which he himself built and operates by hand. He is unable to manipulate crutches or a wheelchair.

Dr. George Anapol, chief traumatic orthopedic surgeon at Yonkers General Hospital, recommended an operation which he said was without danger and would cure the boy.

But the boy's father, Anthony Spiak, who works in a carpet factory, refused to allow the surgery, pointing to a pile of braces in the attic of the home which he said were discarded as useless.

Things as They Are

Jackson Tax Analysis Naive and Inaccurate; Bill Called Blow Aimed at Ford, Mellon.

By Samuel Crowther

IT is our right as citizens to expect that Mr. Jackson, appearing before the Senate committee as a representative of the Treasury—in default of the appearance of the Secretary—would have made something more than a partisan argument.

The Senate has before it a tax measure which, if passed in its present form, will deeply affect the economy of the country and may thrust downward the whole standard of living. One might reasonably expect the presentation of an exhaustive research into the actual distribution of our wealth and income, a study of the actul social effect of large accumulations of wealth, as well as the social effect of breaking up these accumulations by law, and a clarification of the confusion which now exists between the redistribution of wealth and the seizing of wealth by the Government for its own purposes.

The Administration tax bill presents no program for the redistribution of wealth, but only a program for the confiscation of wealth in order to pay for governmental extravagance. Evidently no one in the Treasury competent to discuss the issues raised by the bill was willing to put himself on record in support of it, and therefore Mr. Jackson, a lawyer of limited experience and of no economic background, was sent in as a special pleader.

The result is an argument which makes some misstatements, which ignores points which cannot honestly be ignored by an administrative official who is supposed to speak for the whole people and not for a party, and which jumps from premises to conclusions in the manner of Dr. Townsend and Huey Long.

* * * *

The three points which are ignored are: First, that the expenditures of the Government have passed the point where they can be met out of the income of the people and that the new taxes proposed do not represent any shifting of burdens but only the addition of burdens. Second, that these additional taxes will not redistribute income or adjust any present inequalities, but will accentuate the inequalities which now exist. Third, that the program of wealth confiscation is a once-around affair that will dry up many present large sources of income and then drop the whole burden of taxation on the present middle and lower income classes.

The outstanding misstatements are: First, that large fortunes continue to snowball indefinitely after the death of the founder. Much of the argument for estate taxation is based on this premise, but no facts are presented to sustain the position. None could be presented, for the statement is not true, as I happen to know from an examination into the subject which I made not long ago. Second, that tariffs are paid by the consumer. A whole army of facts exists to show that this is not true except in a few cases and for a short time. Third, that the investing of funds in tax-exempt securities by those who can afford to buy them not only is an evasion of taxes and, by innuendo, immoral, but also causes a net loss in taxes collected. The buyer of tax-exempt securities forego in interest most of what they would have to pay in taxes, and, if the exemption were removed, the political units issuing these bonds would simply have to pay a higher rate of interest.

The Treasury has in its own files the most important material for getting at the real distribution of income in the country. A Government body has already made specific recommendations outlining what steps should be taken to ascertain the distribution of both income and wealth. Without these figures, we are to a considerable extent living in the dark. Mr. Jackson goes to no original sources, but only adds to the prevailing confusion and feeds the demagogues by giving official sanction to what the Brookings Institution admits is only a considered guess on the distribution of income. Students of statistics know that the real figures can not be had without enormous research in which the Treasury must participate.

The use of estate tax returns as a means of getting at the distribution of wealth is one that has long since been discarded by careful students. A survey of the probate records is not even a backhanded method of getting at the distribution of wealth.

The inclusion of these income and wealth figures in the statement is somewhat of a mystery unless the purpose is to give the impression that the tax bill has something to do with ironing out income and wealth inequalities. We do know from careful research that, of the income paid out in this country normally, about 87 per cent goes for wages and 13 per cent for interest and dividends; that, of this latter percentage, about one-half is paid to life insurance companies, savings institutions and people with incomes of less than $10,000 a year. The remaining percentage is all that is left to feed the wealth distribution and tax confiscation addicts, and the fund is not large enough to meet the payments required by their schemes.

* * * *

All of which, however, is beside the point. This is not a wealth redistribution bill. It is not even a revenue bill, for the total amount which can be raised by the bill is insignificant. It is, in its inheritance tax phases, a capital levy which can be justified only as a prelude to State socialism. An advocate of State socialism could make out a tolerable case for the levy. Mr. Jackson, avoiding that issue, makes himself rather ridiculous, for it is impossible to believe that any man, venturing to appear for the Government, could be quite so ignorant of the fuactions of capital as Mr. Jackson pretends to be.

If our rich men kept their fortunes in hoards of precious metals and jewels, as do the Indian princes, then levies upon capital would serve to restore wealth to circulation. But the capital of our rich men is of necessity invested in enterprise. These enterprises sometimes do and sometimes do not return a profit—it can not be too often emphasized that ours is a profit and loss system. In any event, the capital must employ men and must produce something that can be bought and consumed. Capital, to be productive, must generate goods, and in this process many varieties of wages must be paid.

This is elementary. Removing the capital from the hands of the owner and putting it into the hands of the Government is only, in the main, taking it from the live hand and putting it into the dead hand. So the only possible result of extending the scope of confiscation by the dead hand is to limit the amount of productive enterprise and, therefore, the amount that can be paid in wages.

* * * *

The notion that capital principally exists for the enjoyment of its owner is a favorite soap-box theme, but this is the first time, in my knowledge, that it has been put forward by an officer of the Government in his official capacity. There is no comprehension that a great enterprise is, first of all, a public servant and that only as it serves the public can it prosper.

Take the Ford Motor Co. Mr. Jackson thinks of this company as something owned by a family and quite overlooks the fact that it is there only because Henry Ford, by his genius, brought cheap personal transportation to this Nation and has insisted that the earnings of the company be plowed back into it, in order that it might be able to give an ever larger public service. His function—and the function of every rich man—is principally as a trustee.

If approximately half of the value of the Ford Motor Co. had to be paid over to the Government, the heirs would probably be compelled to abandon the company, and this would, directly and indirectly, kill the incomes of 4,000,000 people. If it were possible to raise a bond issue on the property to pay the inheritance taxes, then a fixed charge would be carried into every car and would reflect itself in lower wages. If half the stock could be sold, then probably the management would have to be changed. This might be for the better or for the worse, but certainly for the time being it would interrupt the even flow of production.

Since in our most prosperous times a family holding of, say, five or ten million dollars could be disposed of only gradually with the aid of a banking syndicate, the expression of Mr. Jackson that great private holdings offer no difficulty in their distribution is either naive or uncandid. In most cases, the enterprise would be destroyed and the Government tax would really be paid, not by the heirs, but by the workers who would lose their jobs.

If the desire is to socialize wealth, then that is an issue to be brought out into the open and squarely debated. In truth, however, the present bill has no higher thought than to hit at Mr. Ford and Mr. Mellon, without regard to the consequences to the country. That is the only explanation of Mr. Jackson's sudden emergence as a tax expert.

Ohio Flood Loss Now $5,000,000 In State Check

5 Known Dead, Thousands Homeless as Waters Slowly Recede.

Flood and Heat Toll

Ohio, resurveying the damage from its most disastrous flood in 22 years, set the loss at $5,000,000.

Five persons lost their lives.

Several additional deaths, all attributed to the heat, were reported.

By the Associated Press.

Zanesville, Aug. 9.—Ohio resurveyed tonight the damage from its most disastrous flood in 22 years and set the total at approximately $5,000,000.

Red Cross and Federal relief officials and the National Guard aided local authorities in caring for thousands of persons left temporarily homeless.

The muddy Muskingum and Tuscarawas rivers receded slowly in most places.

Five persons died in the flood. A sixth, a 73-year-old woman feared drowned, was found today wandering in a woods a mile from Irondale village in Columbiana County.

The State highway department was one of the heaviest flood losers. It placed its loss at $1,000,000, equal to that of each of Tuscarawas and Coshocton counties. National Guardsmen patrolled streets in Zanesville and distributed clothing and bedding. The Guardsmen were detailed to the city when fear was expressed levees might burst under the tremendous pressure of water.

The Muskingum at Zanesville passed its crest of 33.6 feet at 2 p. m. today and danger of further damage was believed over as the river fell slowly.

Down the river, at Marietta, the river also fell slowly, despite the fact it still must carry off water from the lowlands upstream.

Rain Ends Record Heat

By the Associated Press.

Relief from 100-plus heat reached Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and the Dakotas Friday and was promised the sweltering southwest Saturday. Kansas continued the focal point of the heat wave, Manhattan blistering in its second consecutive day of 110 degrees.

Seasonal heat records were marked up at Topeka, Kans., 106; Los Angeles, 97, and Ada, Okla., 108.

Temperatures dropped in Nebraska, South Dakota and Iowa following a cloudburst at Sioux Falls, S. D., which poured 2.6 inches of rain on the city in 30 minutes, and scattered showers elsewhere. A high pressure area moving eastward from Wyoming carried promise of relief to Oklahoma, Kansas and Texas.

A rain of frogs at La Jara, Colo., was a freak in the weather melange. Following a heavy rain, tiny frogs covered the ground. Hail damaged crops.

Despite 1.6 inches of rain in northern Iowa Thursday night, Creston roasted today at 102 degrees.

Three deaths were laid to the heat in California, one in Missouri and one in Texas, two Oklahomans drowned.

All Claim Ferris Fired Shots Into Dickinson.

Detroit, Aug. 9 (AP).—Loretta Jackson testified today that Prosecutor Duncan C. McCrea "raved and swore" to make her and three other defendants confess to the slaying of Howard Carter Dickinson.

She was the last of the defendants to take the stand. Like William Lee Ferris, Florence Jackson and Jean Miller, she repudiated each of the statements the prosecutor obtained from her and introduced in evidence.

At the end of the sixteenth day of the trial, the jury had heard two widely divergent stories of the fatal shooting on June 26.

Ferris testified that Dickinson shot himself, either accidentally or with suicidal intent. Florence Jackson said she saw Ferris stand over Dickinson and shoot him. The other women gave substantially the same testimony, but said they did not see the actual shooting. All four denied they had plotted the slaying to obtain the $134 Dickinson was carrying.

$140,000 Seen Lure to Couple In N. J. Killing

Police Discount Wife's Explanation of Her Love for Another Man.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Woodston, N. J., Aug. 9.—State police tonight said they were convinced that the desire to obtain a $140,000 fortune was the incentive behind the slaying of Harry Y. Dolbow, Salem farmer, rather than his wife's admitted romance with Norman Driscoll, her childhood sweetheart.

Mrs. Marguerite Dolbow, 28, a teacher, and Driscoll, a neighbor, are charged with the murder Friday night. Prosecutor A. W. Grier said Mrs. Dolbow made a confession admitting she and Driscoll plotted the slaying "because we loved each other," and that she paid $25 to have it done. Driscoll has denied implication.

According to new information turned up by Corporal Wilfred Dubbie, Mrs. Dolbow was to receive two separate inheritances totaling $140,000 at present controlled by her mother, Mrs. Genevieve Kirlin Fox.

"The mother never liked Dolbow," Corporal Dubbie said, "and did not let her daughter have the money after she married him. That money is now in possession of Mrs. Dolbow's mother and her aunt and at their deaths Mrs. Dolbow and Driscoll, if they were married, could expect to gain possession of it."

He pointed out that the money also might explain why Driscoll gave his estranged wife $2,000 six months ago and told her to get a divorce.

Garment Maker Plans Factory In Alexandria

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 323.

Frank E. Walsh, national representative of the United Garment Workers, addressing a meeting of the striking employes of the Century Manufacturing Co., in Carpenters Hall, stated that he and another labor representative have been conferring with a garment manufacturer in regard to locating his plant in Alexandria, and that the project apparently only needs now the support of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce. This, he said, is a union manufacturer, and will pay much better wages than the women have heretofore received.

Walsh stated he understood the Century Manufacturing Co. is to be reorganized, with local names on the directorate, so as to give it the semblance of being a local concern.

Walsh sharply criticized the recent verdict rendered by Judge James Reese Duncan, in the Alexandria Police Court, discharging Sidney Weinman, who was charged with minor assault on four women strikers.

The special meeting of the city council, the night before the court hearing, was also criticized by Walsh, who said that certain members of the council were "making a political football out of the distress of the women workers." He welcomed a thorough investigation of the strike by the city council, he said, but believed that such investigation should be open to the public, and not behind closed doors, as the former session was.

Walsh claimed that Judge Duncan declined to allow Attorney Harry F. Kennedy, who appeared for the complaining women, to question witnesses as to what had transpired prior to the disturbances which brought the matter to a head, but when Weinman, the only witness in his behalf, took the stand, the judge permitted him to relate incidents which occurred, not only days, but months and even years prior to the strike.

Suits for personal injury, Walsh said, will be filed in another court, and be heard by a jury. The case of the striking women, he said, "will be prosecuted to a successful conclusion."

Rosemary, 3½-year-old girl, whose beating by Harry Gregory caused the latter to be sentenced to a year in jail, only to be released later on condition that he leave the city, was released yesterday in custody of Deaconess Yeo, of the House of Mercy, Washington. Under the court order, the mother of the little girl, her grandmother and aunt, will also have jurisdiction over her.

The arrest of Gregory and his subsequent sentence to a public whipping aroused Nation-wide interest. At the last moment, however, before the whipping was to be administered, Gregory, who had previously chosen the whipping rather than a jail sentence, changed his mind, and the sentence was changed to jail imprisonment of 12 months, with his wife, Jean, also being given a shorter sentence. After serving a part of the sentence, the pair were quietly released on their agreement to leave the city.

The little girl was first turned over to Policeman Benjamin Swan, and later to Mr. and Mrs. Norman C. Treakle, with whom she has been since.

The Alexandria summer school session of eight weeks closed yesterday and at 11 o'clock this morning report cards will be distributed to the 171 pupils who attended. The check-up of examintaions was completed yesterday.

Irving Lindsey, principal of the summer school stated yesterday that 95 per cent of the pupils passed hte examinations, and many of the high and grammar school pupils will win advance as a result of the summer study. The school has been one of the most successful ever conducted.

The teaching staff of the school, which opened on June 17 last, was Irving Lindsey, principal; A. D. Milliken, William Garner, Miss Leslie Cox, Miss Mary Ellen Cato, Mrs. Josephine B. West, Miss Margaret Yates and Miss Margaret Helm.

Mrs. Wayland C. Kidd, the recently elected president of the Alexandria American Legion Auxiliary; Mrs. E. Burnett Ale, the retiring president, and Mrs. Margaret F. Bailey, a past president, were elected delegates to the fourteenth annual convention of the Department of Virginia, American Legion, to be held in Virginia Beach, September 4 to 7, inclusive next, at a meeting held on Thursday night in Gadsby's Tavern.

Alternatives chosen were Mrs. Frankiln DeDier, Mrs. Herbert Cady and Miss Hazel F. Crown.

Smith Plans Contest Of Coleman Election

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 9.—Charging irregularities in the close victory of S. Bernard Coleman, of Fredericksburg, over H. H. Walton in the Twenty-seventh District senatorial primary contest Tuesday, W. Worth Smith, jr., former Senator from the district and Walton's campaign manager, announced today the election would be contested.

Smith said the court would be asked to throw out all ballots in one Spottsylvania precinct. If this move is successful, Mr. Smith said, Mr. Walton would emerge the winner of the hard-fought contest.

Montgomery Board Cautions Liquor Merchant at Potomac

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
1111 Oak Ave., Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone Shepherd 2363.

John C. Hitchcock, proprietor of a store at Potomac, was reprimanded yesterday by the Montgomery County Liquor Control Board. He was informed that his license would be on probation until the end of the license year in April and that "the slightest misstep" in conducting his establishment would result in revocation of his license to sell beer.

The board suspended the wholesale license of J. E. Dyer, of Washington, on the ground that he had failed to comply with an order of the board that he immediately establish a warehouse in Montgomery County from which beer sold to the retailers of the county would be delivered.

The board's beer inspector had reported that Dyer was shipping beer to retailers directly from his warehouse in Georgetown. It was pointed out by the board that this practice does not permit of supervision of the deliveries and checking on the revenue stamps.

Dyer was cited to appear before the board at its meeting next Friday to show cause why his license should not be revoked. In the meantime, the board ordered that any of his drivers delivering in the county after midnight should be arrested.

Several other wholesalers appeared before the board yesterday but agreed to establish warehouses in Montgomery County at once and were permitted to proceed with their sales.

The board voted to change its meeting date from Friday afternoon to Monday afternoon beginning August 26. The usual meeting will be held next Friday.

J. Oscar Foulk, general manager of the dispensary system, was authorized to proceed with remodeling and modernization of the Bethesda dispensary.

The annual supper for benefit of St. John's Church, Olney, will be held today from 4:30 to 8 p. m. in Memorial Hall at Brookeville. Following the supper a dance will be held in Brookeville School by the Young People's Fellowship, arrangements for which are in charge of Miss Ruth Hines.

The annual reunion of the King-Burdette families will be held today in the grove surrounding Wesley Grove Church in Woodfield. A program will be held in the church at 11 a. m., followed by a picnic lunch for more than 100 persons. The afternoon program will include games.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Clarksburg M. E. Church South will serve a chicken and ham supper on the church lawn today at 5. In case of rain, the supper will be held in the school hall. Mrs. Howard Miles is chairman of the general committee.

The Sunday School of the Church of the Ascension, Silver Spring, has been discontinued until the first Sunday in September by the church vestry because of infantile paralysis in the county. The Rev. James S. Cox, vicar, will preach at the 11 a. m. services tomorrow, continuing his sermon series on the Lord's Prayer.

Tax Statement Reveals Rise Over Amount of Last Year.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

Financial transactions involving approximately $1,000,000 were carried on during the last fiscal year in the office of Dr. F. W. Huddleson, treasurer of Fairfax County, Va.

A financial statement prepared in anticipation of the annual audit shows that the total receipts for the last fiscal year amounted to $914,680.63, an increase of $83,960.17 over the 1933-1934 fiscal year when the total receipts were $830,720.46.

The major portion of the increase was caused by the school-building program that was completed during the year, the treasurer explained. A portion of the receipts was money borrowed from the State literary fund and part was a grant to the county school board by the Public Works Administration.

At the beginning of the 1934-1935 fiscal year the county had a cash balance of $348,194.08, and at the close of the year the balance was $334,188.47. Although the cash balance at the end of the fiscal year shows a drop of about $14,000, the treasurer stated that the county is yet to receive an amount in excess of this drop from the PWA. This will actually bring the cash balance over the amount at the beginning of the year. Because the county has not been advised by PWA officials the amount of its final payment, no figure could be set up in the financial statement.

Major receipts during the past fiscal year included $254,327.67 from the collection of current taxes; $32,484.57 from delinquent taxes; $13,503.86 from land redemptions; $5,499.25 from dog tags; $4,380.25 from fines and fees from the Trial Justice Court; $6,707.47 interest on savings; $11,115.54 from insurance, and $21,280.87 from PWA grants.

From the State the receipts were $3,400.05, return of capitation tax payments to the county; $69,523.15 school funds allocated to the county and $102,500 from the State literary fund to partially finance the school building program.

During the year outstanding county bonds, totaling $24,000, were paid with an additional $35,037.50 interest coupons paid.

The balances in the four magisterial districts road debt fund accounts were shown at the end of the fiscal year to be: Dranesville, $90,525.80; Falls Church district, $114,192.66; Mount Vernon district, $7,556.24, and Providence district, $24,892.76.

The cash balance in the general fund at the end of the year was $18,304.15, which is being used to finance local expenditures until taxes are collected this fall.

The School Board of Herndon, Va., composed of F. W. Robinson, B. F. McGuire and Miss Sadie Detwiler, have announced that the faculty of the Herndon High School for the 1935-36 school year, which will open on September 11, will include J. H. Rice, principal; Harold F. Weiler, of Herndon; William Compton, jr., of Manassas; Mrs. Granville White, of Herndon; Miss Julia Coulte, of Amelia Courthouse, Va.; E. J. Heglar, commercial department, with Miss Virginia Weeks, of Mountain Lake Park, Md., assistant; W. R. Crabill, agricultural department, and Miss Virginia Belchee, of Purcellville, Va., home economics.

The teachers in the elementary school will include Miss Emma Ellmore, of Floris, seventh grade; Miss Evelyn Cocke, of Manassas, Va., sixth grade; Mrs. Ernest Gibson, fifth grade; Mrs. Sadie Crabill, fourth grade; Miss Esther Kincheloe, of Fairfax, third grade; Mrs. Ernest Martz, second grade, and Miss Clay Farrar, Amelia, Va., first grade.

New Arlington Bus Line Near, Braden States

Cross-Country Service to Start After Approval of PWA Work.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Assurance was given last night by County Manager Roy S. Braden that the cross-country bus service to be inaugurated by the Washington-Virginia-Maryland Coach Co. will soon be in operation.

Braden pointed out that the delay has only been due to final approval of the PWA for the expenditure of funds to improve streets where sewers have been installed. He further stated that in most instances the routes followed by the bus line will be over streets where sewers have been installed.

George M. Yeatman, president of the Clarendon Business Men's Association, stated yesterday that the movement for such a service in the county was sponsored by the business men and, when the Washington-Virginia-Maryland Coach Co. was approached, Leon Arnold, president, took steps to apply for permission of the State corporation commission to put the line into effect. The application was immediately approved and the company is only awaiting word from the county that the roads are in shape for the buses to travel over, Mr. Yeatman stated.

The service as outlined by Yeatman will provide a connecting service between Lyon Park and Ashton Heights with Clarendon and Cherrydale Country Club Hills with Clarendon.

In an effort to further reduce automobile accidents in the county, County Manager Braden announces traffic lights will be installed at Wilson boulevard and Military road and at Columbia pike and Arlington Ridge road.

The request for a traffic light at Washington-Richmond highway and Twenty-third street, leading into Virginia Highlands, is being considered by the county board, he said.

There are, he pointed out, a number of other dangerous crossings where lights might be installed and it is hoped that in the near future that this can be done.

In addition to installation of traffic lights, Braden says, a survey of the street lighting system is about to be made with a view of providing a more adequate street lighting system for the county.

The Arlington County Republican Club will hold a special meeting next Tuesday night at Moose Hall, Wilson boulevard and Courthouse road, Clarendon. The meeting will consider plans of activity in the coming November election.

Services tomorrow morning at the Clarendon Methodist Church will be conducted by the pastor, the Rev. John H. Pearson. His subject will be "Running From God." During August there will be no evening services.

The Rev. Bud Johnson, evangelist, author and traveler, will conduct a revival meeting at the Ballston Tabernacle beginning tomorrow, according to an announcement by the pastor, the Rev. Marvin S. Cooper. Special music will be furnished by a radio choir and quartet.

Judge George B. Merrick sentenced Earl Higgs, also of Washington, to six months in the House of Correction for exceeding 60 miles an hour. He suspended a $100 fine, imposed for driving drunk.

Sylvan A. Sheridan, of the 5400 block Eighth street northwest, was fined $105 for driving drunk and failing to keep to the right of the road. He appealed. Sheridan was arrested August 5 by Prince Georges County Policeman William Gray.

Proceeds From Picnic To Repair Old Church

Proceeds from the annual picnic given by the White Marsh Catholic Church, Priest Bridge, Md., will be used this year to repair the historic old church. The picnic will be held next Saturday.

The noted landmark at the intersection of the Crain and Defense Highways is showing signs of decay. With the settling of one end of the building, the valuable fresco work on the interior is beginning to crack. No one seems to know how long the old stone walls have been standing. The original church was destroyed by fire in 1853. The present church was rebuilt on the original walls in 1855.

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "If our hopes and affections are spiritual, they come from above, not from beneath, and they bear as of old the fruits of the Spirit" (page 451).

Oldest Colored Pastor Here Observes 50th Anniversary

The Rev. D. E. Wiseman, Only Minister of Church of Our Redeemer, Recalls Early Days; Program Marks Celebration for Veteran.

The Rev. D. E. Wiseman, the only pastor the congregation of the Church of Our Redeemer, Lutheran, has had since the church was organized 50 years ago, last evening celebrated the golden anniversary of the laying of the building's cornerstone.

At a program in the church the veteran pastor, who is now the oldest colored minister in the District of Columbia, received the felicitations, not only of his congregation, but also of several visiting ministers.

Mr. Wiseman recalled that when the church was built he was studying for the ministry under the late Dr. J. G. Butler, then pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle. The young Negro had only recently come here from the Virgin Islands.

After his graduation from Howard University in May, 1884, he devoted himself to the task of building his congregation. He was ordained at Taneytown, Md., with the class of nine young men from Gettysburg Theological Seminary, October 9, 1884.

The cornerstone of the Redeemer Church at Eighth street and Barry place northwest was laid August 9, 1885.

National Previewing Committees Find Majority of Films Fit for Whole Family

Standards Have Been Raised to New High Level

Dividends Have Increased; Former Star Is Extra; Amusement Chatter.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

If one were skeptical of the beneficial results that have accrued from the drive, both within and without the industry, to make motion pictures conform to a standard of ethics and moral worth that will exert a salutary appeal to every member of the family, instead of only to the sophisticates and worldlings, he need only pay heed to the recent pronouncements of the previewing boards that contribute their monthly impressions to the brochure issued from the Will H. Hays office under the title of "Selected Motion Pictures."

There was a time, not so far distant, when this valuable little pamphlet found it difficult to applaud very many of the cinema's releases as entertainment aimed at the tastes of every member of the household. The issue of August 1, just to hand, however, shows all this to be different now.

The evaluations of current films by West and East Coast preview committees, composed of all creeds and all nationalities, as they apply to the first 12 titles considered in the booklet, may be construed as typical of the complete contents of the 16 pages, listing an average of six or more pictures per page. Of the first 12 films appraised, 9 are deemed satisfactory for "family" consumption and are so indicated. The others, instead of bearing any stigma of moral or ethical laxity, are designated merely as "adult" entertainment in which children and adolescents might not be especially interested.

Shows Great Progress.

This is a remarkable result to have been achieved within the short period of a single year and reflects a distinct inclination on the part of the major producers of motion pictures to conform to mass public taste in the fashioning of their wares, since many of the pictures released during the past twelvemonth necessarily were contracted for before the national campaign of a year ago last spring brought the matter to a head.

It is interesting to note that many of the pictures included in the first dozen rated by the August 1 bulletin already have been seen and approved by Washington's press and public. Among these are "Curly Top," starring Shirley Temple; "Jalna," now at RKO-Keith's; "Love Me Forever," with Grace Moore and Leo Carrillo; "Shanghai," with Loretta Young and Charles Boyer, and "Stranded," starring Kay Francis and George Brent.

Included in the list also are the following pictures, which open today on local screens: "The Farmer Takes a Wife," co-starring Janet Gaynor and Henry Fonda, at Loew's Palace, and "Orchids to You," with John Boles and Jean Muir, at the Columbia.

Not seen here as yet are "Anna Karenina," Edward Arnold in "Diamond Jim," the Pommer-Fox production of "Liliom," with Charles Boyer; "Nell Gwynn," with Anna Neagle, and Sir Cecil Hardwicke and Jan Kiepura in "My Song to You."

"Karenina" Rated Best.

These, it should be stressed, take into consideration only the first 12 of the many films treated in the August resume of the preview findings.

The best picture of the month is proclaimed to be "Anna Karenina," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the novel by Count Leo Tolstoi, in which the star is Greta Garbo, supported by Frederic March and Freddie Bartholomew.

This is the second time Garbo has made this subject for M-G-M, the first production having been back in the old semi-silent days before sound had found itself on the screen.

The moguls of the manufacturies have been a little surprised, it is reasonably safe to say, to discover that there are greater dividends in pictures enjoyed by the "family" trade than in those projected exclusively for the "adults."

So it may be presumed that the "family" pictures are here to stay, more or less like the telephone, the motor car and the income tax!

Alfred Waldron, jr., for the past seven years staff cameraman for the Washington office of Fox Movietone News, under the management of Arthur De Titta, yesterday sailed for Abyssinia aboard the S. S. Majestic to cover whatever poison-gassing and bow-and-arrowing may break out between the cohorts of the Lion of Juda and the legions of Il Duce. Even if nothing happens in the way of international pummeling, Mr. Waldron still will have plenty to "shoot," as those will testify who remember the pictures brought back by Burton Holmes at the time of Haile Selassie's coronation. Since Mr. De Titta's letter advising me of this safari was written on the sixth, and things have quieted down a little since then, it may even be that Mr. Waldron didn't sail at all. In which case there are still some good lions out at the Zoo!

Eddy for Grand Opera.

It is highly appropriate that the flash should come from the public city department of the loewcal Loew organization on canary colored paper that arrangements have just been completed on the West Coast between the San Francisco Opera Company and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, whereby, on the evening of November 11, Nelson Eddy will sing in Verdi's colorful opera of "Aida." This will be a civic event of some importance in the musical season at the Golden Gate.

Mr. Eddy, who scored so solidly in "Naughty Marietta," with Jeanette MacDonald, will be heard opposite the same alluring soprano in "Rose Marie," an M-G-M camera-and-microphone rendition of the famous operetta, which will be seen and heard as one of the hits booked for Loew's Palace in the new season's long line of superior pictures recently made public in this space.

Of all things!

It is being bruited about in usually informed circles that when the so-called Willard Roof Players present "East Lynne" in the auditorium of the National Press Club next Wednesday night—with beer and pretzel trimmings such as embellished the presentation of "The Drunkard" last summer atop Col. Somerville's inn—this durable old tear-jerker will be played in blackface!

Since "East Lynne" is an English story, it is understood to be the plan to throw a slight shock into the customers by having the classic lines read in purest Oxonian accents by burnt-cork actors made up in the minstrel, or "Uncle Tom's Cabin," manner.

This innovation—beer and pretzels having lost something of the ting of novelty by now—will not jar as much as might be expected upon the ears of those who ever have lived in and of the British possessions in the West Indies. I recall one ancient Jamaican, as black as the dead of a moonless midnight, whose cadences easily could have been mistaken for those of a poet laureate.

It's not a bad idea, the silly season being what it is, even if the Roof Players don't do it!

Sour Dough!

It sounds like real money.

I mean to say, if some one were to offer you 35,000 rubles a month for performing a certain service, the natural assumption would be that you were in the dough, in a manner of speaking.

That is what Phil Spitalny, who brings his "Hour of Charm" orchestra to the stage of the Earle Theater today, thought when 35,000 rubles a month was dangled before him as bait for a tour of the U. S. S. R., to which, incidentally, Mr. Spitalny is not a total stranger. When a contract at this figure was offered, Phil, who knows the value of a dollar as well as he does of high "C" or a string choir in the Beethoven number, snapped at it like a starving Armenian at a piece of toast—especially since the generous Stalinites agreed to pay all expenses, including transportation and bed and board.

Exchange Changes All!

Then somebody who knew something about foreign exchange whispered gently in the Spitalny ear. Each ruble of the 35,000, it turned out, would be worth precisely 2½ pennies in American money. The maestro got busy with a pencil and piece of paper and figured out that each of his 32 girl instrumentalists and the others in his organization would receive about $26 a month during the grand tour of the Soviet.

Mr. Spitalny and his 32 distaff musicians did not go to Russia. Furthermore, Mr. Spitalny and his 32 distaff musicians no longer are relying on their old dictionary. That was the one that said a ruble was the equivalent of "51.5 cents."

It is Mr. Spitalny's private opinion that it is the equivalent of a pain in the neck—or thereabouts.

We remarked here a few days ago that tempus seems to keep everlastingly at it—meaning the disturbing business of fugiting. Perhaps it flies just a bit too rapidly in Hollywood. In the span of a decade, property boys become producers and producers become vagrants; the cinema becomes articulate and Jean Acker becomes an extra!

To many of this generation that may not mean much, if anything at all. But it was not so many years ago that Jean Acker was the first Mrs. Rodolph Valentino, wife of the greatest lover the screen has known. Rodolph passed sensationally—and on the part of the morbidly curious, a little disgracefully—from this mortal coil on August 23, 1926, which, two weeks from today, will be exactly nine years ago.

If those attending the Warner Brothers Metropolitan today, or any day this week, observe closely and know her by sight, they will discover Jean Acker as an extra in the mob surrounding Mary Ellis in "Paris in Spring." She is glad to leave the past in quiet repose and occasionally taste the glamour of the life she used to know so well in an obscure extra part, just for old-times' sake. She has modest means to keep the wolf from galloping clear down the hall and prefers not to be recognized or questioned about the old days.

The past for her is beneath a memorial column, the last earthly feminder of a man named Valentino.

Identification Card.

It was partially on account of his alleged resemblance to Valentino that certain producers, with an eye to the box-office, decided to launch a Raft.

But not so many people went to see

Will Flutter Feminine Hearts

These two cinema leading men are expected to set idol worshipers' hearts all atwitter when they come to local screens today. At left, above, is Tullio Carminati, remembered with Grace Moore in "One Night of Love," who now appears opposite Mary Ellis, another songbird, in "Paris in Spring," at the Metropolitan Theater, and at right, Henry Fonda, looked upon as a "find," who is cast opposite Janet Gaynor in the film version of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," opening today on the screen at Loew's Palace.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

Thinking Out Loud

New York, Aug. 9.

YESTERDAY, in a brown manila envelope postmarked Bridgeport, Conn., there arrived a program booklet of the forty-fifth reunion of the Legion of Valor . . . On the back of it, in response to a paragraph that recently appeared here about a decorated veteran who needed a job, there are the autographs of 16 holders of the Congressional Medal of Honor or Distinguished Service Cross . . . Attached to the program was the clipping from my column, and scrawled across it the single word: "Thanks" . . . I've never saved autographs . . . There are only six pictures that I've ever had framed for my room . . . But this autographed program will be framed, for it is the most thrilling memento that has ever come to this desk.

• • • •

THE ROOM itself has taken on sparkle since the mailman arrived, for he brought something brave and valorous with him in the brown manila envelope, a composite of courage . . . Reading the 16 names listed, each with a "C. M. H." or "D. S. C." jotted down after it, in fancy you hear the roll of drums, the tramp of feet, the whiplash crackle of top sergeants' commands . . . The wind from Flanders Fields carries again the brassy challenge of bugles, and the horizon is blotted out by the khaki of ghost regiments . . . You see a French general, Black Jack Pershing at his side, pinning 16 medals on these 16 men who lived to tell the tale . . . On Broadway, distinction is earned by a talent for telling stories, a gift for dancing, a talent for singing . . . These won distinction by no glibness of tongue or feet . . . Their orchestral accomplishment was the dull throb of cannonfire, the choppy moan of machine guns . . . The baton in the conductor's hand was a bayonet, blood-flecked.

• • • •

IN THIS grim, bloody arena, the men who autographed this program on my desk won fine distinction . . . In the short compass of a few months, these former clerks and professional men stepped from well-ordered and carefully planned lives into an orgy of terror . . . And while the earth ran red with blood, these men of peace achieved deeds of incredible valor . . . Breeman, Tegland, Crilley, Eickom, Wariton, Eadie, Cohen, Thornhill, Ayotte, Doyle, Mader, Carson, Powell, Hicks, Shemin, Killackey—each of these performed an act of heroism so far above the ordinary that he was decorated on the battlefield . . . So I'll hang their names on my wall, adopt them into the family . . . Each one of them is free to call on me for anything he lacks, help in locating a job, advice . . . Within my power, I'll be godfather to the bravest family circle that ever lived, for seven of them wear the Congressional Medal of Honor and nine of them wear the Distinguished Service Cross . . . I don't belong in that kind of company, but I'll try to make good, because I'm one godfather who'll really work at it, s'help me . . . I only hope that they'll let me adopt them . . . They may be choosey.

• • • •

FORCEFUL contrast to this gallant group was offered last night, when I stopped at Columbus Circle with Dave Vine, greatest of Broadway story tellers . . . A dark-faced, serious Communist was haranguing a group of men . . . He had a briefcase under one arm, and he wore a sleeveless sweater . . . "One thing about the masses," he was saying when we edged in, "they adopt peaceful means to an end. The capitalistic system is scientifically cruel in applying punishment. The masses are not cruel. Even when the Czar was dethroned, they shot him to death—the masses didn't torture him to death as the capitalists would have done had the positions been reversed." Finally, one of us broke in: "If the masses are not cruel, explain mob lynching." He was plainly upset by the direct hit. Luckily for him, an interlude was created by a bored street cleaner, with a barrel on a cart: "Move out of the way, huh?" he said, but it was a command, not a question. We loafers made way for the street cleaner. It was a clean-cut victory for labor and the worker had the Communist only realized it.

• • • •

Notes—Jack Kirkland and June Travis have resumed where they left off . . . If H. Richman clicks with Columbia, he'll get three more flickers . . . Arthur Willi is Coast bound for RKO . . . M.-G.-M. is calling Luise Ranier on the carpet for chilling the press . . . Cross and Dunn go into the Versailles . . . Frazee Sisters, Chicago sister team that excited this space's raves, will get a Broadway cafe booking, a Detroit job and a movie test . . . Nelson Eddy has turned to Frances Marion . . . Hope you took my tip on Joe Louis to win as he pleased . . . Did Peter Arno and Timmie Lansing get spliced? . . . Toby Wing will emote for Jack Goetz in his first Canadian-made flicker, starting Monday, on a loan from Paramount . . . M.-G.-M. execs are just as pleased that Winnie Sheehan went with Paramount . . . Jack Benny, Eleanor Powell and Sid Silvers are terrific in "Broadway Melody" . . . Jack Waldron says he knows a lot of "G" men—Goldstein, Ginsberg, Garfinkle . . . Recommended: Peg Leg Bates, one-legged colored hoofer, at Loew's State . . . Handsomest B'way theater manager, Bob Weitmann, at the Paramount . . . Handsomest cafe proprietor, Joe Moss . . . Hattie Silverman landed the season's biggest bass at Saranac yesterday . . . Ernie Holst goes into the Stork Club . . . Paul Whiteman's crew opens at Ben Marden's Riviera Wednesday . . . Prosperity Note: Broadway cafe operators predict the biggest winter-season since 1929.

"C" or a string choir in the Beethoven number, snapped at it like a starving Armenian at a piece of toast—especially since the generous Stalinites agreed to pay all expenses, including transportation and bed and board.

Exchange Changes All!

Then somebody who knew something about foreign exchange whispered gently in the Spitalny ear. Each ruble of the 35,000, it turned out, would be worth precisely 2½ pennies in American money. The maestro got busy with a pencil and piece of paper and figured out that each of his 32 girl instrumentalists and the others in his organization would receive about $26 a month during the grand tour of the Soviet.

Mr. Spitalny and his 32 distaff musicians did not go to Russia. Furthermore, Mr. Spitalny and his 32 distaff musicians no longer are relying on their old dictionary. That was the one that said a ruble was the equivalent of "51.5 cents."

It is Mr. Spitalny's private opinion that it is the equivalent of a pain in the neck—or thereabouts.

We remarked here a few days ago that tempus seems to keep everlastingly at it—meaning the disturbing business of fugiting. Perhaps it flies just a bit too rapidly in Hollywood. In the span of a decade, property boys become producers and producers become vagrants; the cinema becomes articulate and Jean Acker becomes an extra!

To many of this generation that may not mean much, if anything at all. But it was not so many years ago that Jean Acker was the first Mrs. Rodolph Valentino, wife of the greatest lover the screen has known. Rodolph passed sensationally—and on the part of the morbidly curious, a little disgracefully—from this mortal coil on August 23, 1926, which, two weeks from today, will be exactly nine years ago.

If those attending the Warner Brothers Metropolitan today, or any day this week, observe closely and know her by sight, they will discover Jean Acker as an extra in the mob surrounding Mary Ellis in "Paris in Spring." She is glad to leave the past in quiet repose and occasionally taste the glamour of the life she used to know so well in an obscure extra part, just for old-times' sake. She has modest means to keep the wolf from galloping clear down the hall and prefers not to be recognized or questioned about the old days.

The past for her is beneath a memorial column, the last earthly feminder of a man named Valentino.

Identification Card.

It was partially on account of his alleged resemblance to Valentino that certain producers, with an eye to the box-office, decided to launch a Raft.

Baiting for Morgan Baker.

SOME fine material is contained in the collection of lectures and problems issued by the Department of Agriculture, relating to personnel administration. These lectures were given by authorities on matters pertaining to Government management of employes during a short course sponsored by the department.

One lecture offers some important suggestions on the art of management and stresses the need for applying scientific knowledge to the problem of personnel administration.

With a vast army of Government workers it is essential that those who are charged with the responsibility of administering the personnel should be well-equipped, both by temperament and technical training. The Department of Agriculture is to be commended for its efforts in furthering the cause of better personnel management.

Practically every Federal department was represented in these personnel courses. Officials of the school were Peter Keplinger, Forest Service, chairman, and A. C. Edwards, Agricultural Economics, coordinator.

An expression of deep appreciation for Representative Ramspeck's untiring fight and successful culmination of the passage of the leave bills in the House has been communicated to him in a resolution by a representative group of A. F. G. E. lodges and members. Miss Esther Penn, national secretary, announced.

Convention Delegates.

Charles F. Sharkey, president, Labor Lodge, No. 12, A. F. G. E., and Kathryne Ramsey have been elected delegates to the annual convention to be held in Cincinnati. Alternates are Nora Lane and Lawrence Brown.

The lodge, in its monthly meeting, went on record as opposing the resolution offered by N. R. A. Lodge, No. 91, which would have permitted picketing by Government employes. At the 1934 meeting of the A. F. G. E. in New York, the convention went on record overwhelmingly in favor of a provision prohibiting picketing by Government employes.

Employes of the Insurance Service, Veterans Administration, presented Miss Anna C. Kern with a portable radio upon the occasion of her retirement. Miss Kern is leaving Washington in September, and, after a short visit with friends in Ann Arbor, Mich., will make her home with relatives in Minneapolis.

The following expression of sympathy for Morgan Baker has been made by the A. F. G. E.:

"A resolution by special meeting of representative groups of A. F. G. E. officers and members was unanimously passed expressing much regret at hearing of Mr. Morgan Baker's illness with sincerest hope for his speedy recovery, and a desire to see him active again at his post on the Federal Diary in the very near future. Sympathy for Mr. Baker was extended in that he should have this ill fortune befall him at a time when he would have been alert and actively assisting in the advancement, through the Federal Diary, of the splendid progressive legislation passed by the House in behalf of Government employes in connection with the annual and sick leave bills."

An Ounce Of Prevention.

It would be deplorable if the sensible decision to cancel the Boy Scout Jamboree should create any unnecessary concern regarding the mild epidemic of infantile paralysis which is prevalent in parts of North Carolina and Virginia.

Notwithstanding announcements that the convention was called off purely and simply as a rational precautionary measure, and not as a result of increase in cases, some excitable people will doubtless find cause for alarm in the decision. There will be those who will say that Surgeon General Cumming would not have changed his mind about permitting the convention unless the danger were becoming serious for Washington. Actually he is only exercising the probably excessive precaution which the great responsibility of his position demands, in view of the fact that the hoped-for abatement of contagion is not yet at hand.

The very nature of the disease thus guarded against is one which creates a predisposition to anxiety. Any illness which strikes primarily at children is always regarded with peculiar apprehension. The toll in after-effects of infantile paralysis gives it additional terror. These factors, coupled with the fact that "polio" is essentially a hot-weather disease, make it incumbent on the health authorities to avert the risk, however slight, involved in concentrating 26,000 boys here this month.

The final decision regarding the Boy Scout Jamboree should be looked on as providing a test of the basic principles of the organization. It was launched for the purpose of training boys in the attributes of co-operation, unselfishness and good citizenship. While the convention would have focused attention on the successful attainment of these ends, the cancellation can do so equally well. Some 26,000 boys will be badly disappointed. But it is safe to predict that they will take the blow like men, and thereby further demonstrate that they're not only good Scouts, but good sports as well.

Cotton And Hogs.

The Government's cotton forecast published last Thursday pointed to a probable output of 11,798,000 bales—2,162,000 bales more than last year. The estimated yield per acre is exceptionally large, moreover, because of favorable weather conditions and intensive cultivation. On that same day the price of hogs was reported to have risen to the highest figure since 1929, as a result of an acute shortage of supplies which has reduced current shipments to livestock centers to record low figures.

With the price of pork products soaring and the cotton market sagging under the weight of unsold supplies, actual and prospective, AAA officials must feel grave doubt about the permanence of the benefits conferred by their restrictionist policies. If they are honest with themselves, moreover, they will have to admit that their price-raising plans have been sadly upset by events they did not foresee and conditions they could not control.

When the Government decreed the wholesale slaughter of millions of little pigs in 1933, the canny planners of the AAA did not make allowance for a destructive drought which later turned an artificially created shortage into a serious scarcity. They did not reckon upon a price rise so rapid and uncontrollable as to evoke angry protests from consumers, nor did they consider the loss of business and the declines in employment that would follow in stockyards and packing houses handling hogs.

The experiment in cotton control affords another illuminating illustration of the pitfalls that lie in wait for those who think they can blueprint the capricious forces of Nature and man. The AAA undoubtedly has succeeded in bringing about a sharp curtailment of cotton acreage by paying farmers not to cultivate their land. But it has not been able to prevent the farmer, aided by good weather and encouraged by high prices, from growing more cotton per acre. Furthermore, it has been quite impossible to hold the export market for American cotton in face of the competition of lower-priced cotton of foreign growth. The net result is that an expected increase of over 2,000,000 bales of cotton will come on the market this year, more than offsetting the reduction in last season's carryover.

The Government is already holding 5,000,000 bales of cotton, against most of which loans of 12 cents per pound have been made. As the new crop appears it will be necessary to make further loans to hold more cotton off the market in order to prevent a collapse of the carefully erected and wholly artificial price structure. Secretary Wallace already has given assurance that such loans will be available if prices should become unduly depressed.

Thanks in large part to the AAA, the country is, therefore, suffering from an acute shortage of pork products which benefits only a limited number of farmers and places great burdens upon consumers and processors taxed to pay benefits. At the same time, it is paying for a cotton-restriction program which has converted a real physical shortage into an economic surplus by cutting off normal consumption outlets. The people of the United States, in short, are carrying the burden of costly experiments involving the Government in commitments that promise no permanent benefits. The AAA record has proved that it is sheer folly to try to adjust an uncontrollable supply to an unpredictable demand. The sooner the fact is acknowledged, the better it will be for everyone.

Mighty Like A Rose.

Vachel Lindsay, says Edgar Lee Masters in the current Saturday Review of Literature, saw America "as baseball all through long summer days . . . as the prize ring of John L. Sullivan . . . as the white tops of the American circus." It is regrettable that the late Mr. Lindsay did not also view it as a land of friendly rivalry which takes form in sports, races and, last but not least, beauty contests, both bathing and baby. One of the latter was held in Washington this week at the Wheatley Playground and more than 100 boys and girls were entered. There in one sentence are the mythical ingredients of every newspaper story—the who, what, when and where.

But if you think that's all there is to a baby show, it just goes to prove that you've never been a baby. In the first place, the affair is at one time simpler and yet more complicated than any other kind of competitive exhibition. For purposes of comparison, bathing beauty contests must necessarily have more than one beauty on parade. Dog shows, too, involve a lot of red tape about entrance, coat, stance, etc. And in both these cases, a judge is essential in order to reach a verdict and, except in rare instances, his decision is regarded as law.

That's where the baby show has it all over the others. As far as mothers are concerned, it isn't at all expedient to have more than one child entered to make a good show. Next, there isn't any set standard for entrance. Curly heads are ranged along with straight ones; blue eyes twinkle at brown ones; frail, fairylike babies sit or lie next to roly-poly ones. There are bald-headed babies, long-haired tots, serious seraphim and cheerful cherubim. Above all, a judge is not only unnecessary, but actually superfluous. Each baby has already been individually weighed in the parental balance before it left home and anything further along that line is simply extraneous.

Perhaps the nicest part about a baby show is that no matter which baby wins the prize, it is not a reflection on all the others who didn't. It's just a reflection on the judge!

Billions For A Botchery.

The bungling, reckless and incredibly inefficient unemployment relief policy of the present Administration comes to its logical conclusion with the strike on work-relief projects now launched in New York and threatened in other cities. That a demonstration of this character should be possible is obviously a national disgrace. But the fundamental blame rests less on the misguided strikers than on the light-hearted series of governmental blunders which has made the present outcome almost natural.

From the beginning the Roosevelt Administration has had no real policy of unemployment relief. Two and one-half years after this President's entry into unchallenged power there is still no effective nation-wide employment exchange system. In other words, we still lack the essential basis for scientific and orderly unemployment relief.

For all the talk about the forgotten man, the White House can not today say with any assurance how many unemployed there are in the country. Still less can the incidence of this social ailment by occupation, age or locality be analyzed. A Federal-State unemployment insurance system is about to go into operation, but without any adequate machinery for registration, placement or checking of malingerers. The only achievement of the Administration in this field to date has been to build a keystone without an arch into which to fit it.

Instead of learning from the lessons of other industrial countries in this thoroughly explored field the Administration has gayly followed a procedure which time and again in history has proved a ghastly failure. It has sedulously emphasized the idea that the State has a responsibility to provide employment for every one and it has been broadly intimated that such employment should be rewarded on a scale which will insure "the more abundant life."

The application of this pretty theory has been placed in the hands of narrowly trained social workers who have throughout emphasized what is ethical at the expense of what is practical. Within the maze of different agencies established there has been wild confusion. Between them there has been utter absence of coordination. The first time the Federal Employment Service ever heard of the CWA experiment is said to have been when its officers read about it in the newspapers.

Any fool can make some sort of a splash by spending unlimited money. But the Roosevelt Administration, even by pouring out billions through the PWA, the CWA, the FERA, the WPA and lesser bungholes, has utterly failed to produce any real improvement in employment. How long can these grasshopper tactics continue?

Only yesterday Harry Hopkins announced "increasing needs of white-collar workers on relief." His method of meeting the problem is to promote the writing of guide books, innumerable other cockeyed boondoggling undertakings, and "statistical survey projects" such as "a house-to-house canvass to study prevalence of chronic diseases." All this when there is not even machinery to determine, within a couple of million, how many are unemployed. That is the "chronic disease" on which Mr. Hopkins would do well to do some fundamental thinking.

Strikes to insist on prevalent wages for those on work relief are thus only in keeping with the whole utterly irresponsible program. Such strikes are in defiance of the law; they are intolerable; they can only, as Gen. Johnson points out, "arouse the resentment of the community" and lead to disaster. But the deeper problem is the disgraceful misgovernment which has made strikes of this sort possible.

The deeper problem is the combination of wishful dreams and amateurish administration which is spending billions to produce a botchery. When community resentment concentrates on the source of the evil we may be able to eliminate such vicious absurdities as strikes to secure trade union wages for work relief of very questionable economic value.

No Credits To Italy.

The Export-Import Bank is reported to be turning down applications for short-term credits made by exporters desiring to finance cotton shipments to Italy. Officials are quoted as saying that the bank has adopted a policy of refusing to make advances on commodities which might be used in the manufacture of munitions.

If a munitions embargo is to be imposed upon trade with Italy, however, that is a matter for the executive and the legislative branches of the Government to decide. Certainly it does not properly lie within the province of a financing agency acting in accordance with arbitrary judgments of its officers.

The bank probably has other and much more convincing reasons for hesitating to extend credits of any kind to Italy under present conditions. It was learned some time ago that American banks are reducing their Italian acceptance credits because of the unsatisfactory exchange position of the lira. British exporters have also protested to their own government against the long delays in payment of goods shipped to Italy. British and other exporters are, furthermore, refusing to make deliveries except for cash for fear the lira may be devalued before payments are made. The seriousness of the financial position is reflected, too, in the recent release of gold reserves by Italy to pay for needed imports.

The accumulated evidence of Italian credit weakness strengthens the belief that devaluation is inevitable, especially in view of the heavy strain due to preparation for war with Abyssinia. Restrictions upon imports and stringent exchange control have not prevented a flight from the currency, nor sufficed to keep the lira at gold parity. Official exchange rates are already considerably below parity, while on the so-called "black bourse" the lira is at an even greater discount.

Under these circumstances, it is easy to understand why the Export-Import Bank is being importuned to assume the risks that the regular commercial banks have declined to take. It is not necessary and it is quite unsuitable to try to disguise the real situation by pretending that an embargo upon "munitions" shipments has been declared by an agency that has been given no authority for taking such action.

Not So Good A Neighbor.

The mission of Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, who leaves England today for the Far East, is said to be inducement to Nanking to join the sterling bloc. Although it seems unlikely that such efforts by the chief economic adviser to the British government will meet with success, the attempt to add China to that long list of countries, including Japan, whose currencies are more or less loosely "tied to" sterling, is at least significant for the United States. It originates in the fact that China is at present in the grip of a severe financial crisis attributable in large measure to the disturbing effects of our silver-purchase program.

The rise in silver prices, for which we are responsible, and the shortage of funds created by the exporting and hoarding of silver, have exerted a severe deflationary pressure upon Chinese real estate and securities. Numerous bank closings and business failures have resulted, and it is understood that Sir Frederick is hastening to China in the hope of saving British interests there from impending disaster.

Hence the time is well chosen for urging the Chinese to abandon a currency system that renders them vulnerable to the monetary experimentation of a foreign power so indifferent to the effect of its policies upon friendly trading nations. While the United States was still holding its leading position as exporter to China during the first five months of this year, the ill-will aroused by our silver-buying activities may cost us dear in the long run. The reputation of the Chinese as resolute boycotters of those who offend them is well known.

Even without joining the sterling bloc, therefore, Chinese traders may be disposed to throw their custom to a country like Great Britain, whose monetary policies do not constitute a perpetual threat to their financial and economic stability.

Letters To The Editor.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Bring On Your Dogs!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a subscriber to The Post for over 25 years I am wondering just what happened to its editorial page.

Time was when I thought The Post the only Washington newspaper with a worth-while editorial page. Under the new management The Post in this respect has fallen from its former high position.

Its editorials may have the form, certainly not the substance. They are prosy and dull, have none of the sparkle real editorials have. Further poor judgment is shown in selection of material for editorial treatment.

Formerly when The Post came I turned first to the editorial page. Then I read and relished every one of its editorials. Found even letters from readers interesting and at times instructive.

Now I turn to the editorial page after I have finished with the other pages; at that, skip those dealing with subjects, none too few, that do not and can not interest me. If it were not for the letters, a bright spot in an otherwise dull page, I might entirely skip the page.

Sorry that it is necessary for me to make such admission. I have read The Post for so many years (except the period immediately preceding our entry into the World War) that it is becoming a habit. But even a habit may be broken when it ceases to give pleasure or satisfaction.

If this be published you will find that many of the older readers of what not long since was Washington's best newspaper share my views. SAMUEL SALOMAN.

Inhuman Cacophony.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I recently spent a week in your city and think I have never heard such nerve-racking noises as are perpetrated by the drivers, especially the taxi drivers, of the Capital. It is unbelievable that the authorities permit such an infringement of human rights as results from this obsession for honking that seems to give such infantile pleasure to the noise-loving drivers who infest your streets.

Much of the pleasure of visiting Washington is destroyed by this inhuman cacophony, and I feel that every visitor there would appreciate the extermination of this breed of noise producers. I. T. FRARY.

Counterpoint.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Paul S. Carter's comment on Mr. Ganz in The Post, dated August 4, is by far the most inane musical criticism I have ever had the misfortune to encounter.

The crude letter is too banal to be taken seriously. Mr. Carter's lone opinion really counts very little when compared with thousands of musicians and concert-goers the world over, who hold Mr. Ganz's art in high esteem. But for the sake of those who do not know Mr. Ganz it may be well to say a word in his defense.

Mr. Carter may have his line, but it most certainly is not music, and the public would benefit more if he confined his writings to a subject he knew something about.

"Rainy Evening."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This is in the nature of a tribute to the writer of "Rainy Evening" in the column, "The Time, The Place, The Story," in this morning's issue.

It touched a responsive chord, and I've read and reread it—and cut it out, which is something I very seldom do. And never before have I written to tell anyone that I enjoyed a column.
BEATRICE SHERMAN.
Washington, Aug. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will you convey to the writer of the articles, "The Time, The Place, The Story," in this morning's Post my sincere admiration and thanks for the beauty of the composition.

It is too bad that with the fine paper you are placing in our hands you have resorted to lowering its value to Christian people (and also to those people who hold dear the welfare of their children and brothers as well as fathers and mothers) by the taking of liquor ads. GRACE B. LINGER.

Results Of Boycotting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read Mr. Harvey's letter regarding the "Dangers of Boycotting" (on page 6 of The Post of August 7) and must say that I completely agree with him. After all, trading means "exchanging goods," and no one-way trade is possible. As you will know, the boycotting of Germany has been going on here for quite a while. However, it seems to me that the result has been about the exact opposite of what it was intended to be. Before the boycott movement started Germany was one of our best customers. But when we stopped buying from them they also stopped sending us their orders, and they are now buying from us exactly as much as we are ordering over there. The German business, apparently, is now going to South America, Egypt, South Africa, etc., and our farmers and raw material producers are paying the bill.

Whistler Of Lowell.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Portions of Post-Impressionist's recent comment on Whistler having been reprinted in the catchall column of the Lowell Courier-Citizen, may I through the courtesy of your letter box tell Blondelle Malone that a few lines of reminiscence from "one who knew Mr. Whistler's family and artist friends intimately" would be appreciated in this city, where, to his disgust, Whistler was born July 10 (not July 11, as in some publications), 1834? We have a growing collection of Whistleriana at the Whistler house, which serves as our local art center, and the Courier-Citizen has printed more about the Whistlers than, probably, has appeared in any other newspaper.

The Whistler house, incidentally, at 247 Worthen street, Lowell, is open daily to visitors, without charge for admission, and an increasing number of motorists from every part of the Nation while vacationing in New England look up Whistler's birthplace and its various souvenirs.

Rhode Island Not A Hoover Call.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to the papers, Mr. Roosevelt was "unaware of the Rhode Island election until he read about it." By the same token, those two Dromios, James and Elliott, were in similar ignorance, and probably National Chairman Farley, also. Does the titular head of the New Deal Party suppose that even the most unintelligent citizen is fooled by such drivel?

Does the President wish the country to understand that he didn't know Secretary Ickes did his utmost to help elect the Democratic nominee for Congress in Rhode Island? Does he wish the country to believe that Farley didn't do all in his power as Postmaster General and chief machinist of the New Deal to elect General Treasurer Prince to Congress? The Green State administration exerted itself to the utmost for victory, and for its pains, and those of the White House, the country notes a change of 34,000 votes from November, 1934. Some reversal!

However, we may count on soon hearing again, "The Republican Party is dead." Even the most hidebound Republican, after three defeats of the democracy under Bryan, and the thundering one in 1920 and again in 1924, never became so foolish as to declare that the Democratic Party was dead. Texas Democrats who have served their party for years naturally resent the presumption of Son Elliott when he undertakes to essay Der Kronprinz among them. Bay State Democrats showed what they thought of Son James when the then Governor of New York sought the Massachusetts delegates. If Son James elects to become a voter in the State wherein his new activities as a yeast magnate are carried on, he will find that Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City will brook no nonsense.

Let it not be forgotten that the Republican nominee had the good sense to keep the name of Hoover out of his campaign. The public will wonder if the former President will show a bit of sense in his turn and not assume that the Rhode Island result is a "call" to him. It is nothing of the kind. The Republican Party must present next year a nominee utterly free of the slightest suspicion of Hooverism. It was the resentment against those political theories and practices that made the Democratic nomination of 1932 a guaranty of election, just as surely as the Theodore Roosevelt bolt of 1912 assured success to whoever won the Democratic nomination at Baltimore.

Hoover's intimates know he can not be nominated, but thus far he has not the courtesy and good sense to relieve them, and the Republican Party, of needless annoyance. The gradual development of sentiment against the destructive New Deal will likewise gradually eliminate Hoover from the slightest consideration by the Republican convention. Already the Senate and House campaign committees of the Republican Party have divorced themselves from the Hoover-Fletcher national committee—but those worthies do not yet sense its significance. E. M. MARSTON.

The Post Impressionist

More Oliver Than Cromwell.

Post Office, Saturday.

IN his early article on the late Oliver Herford, which recently graced the page opposite this one, Dr. William Lyon Phelps did not attempt to publish all the stories that used to be told, as Herford's own, about that artist, rhymer and wit. Nor was the vast supply perceptibly lessened by the published obituaries.

Not that the anecdotes weren't every one publishable. Whatever else may be said about it, Herford's wit was always clean. But its manifestations were legion.

So perhaps the Post-Impressionist may be allowed to recall a couple.

An entirely publishable virtue, although sometimes bitter! After all, as Sheridan—the dramatist, not Gen. Phil—once wrote: "There's no possibility of wit without a little ill nature." And no one who knew it will soon forget the malice that Oliver nourished against one of the few bores who were on the member list of the Players' Club in New York.

* * *

This fellow talked everybody to the frontier of the undiscovered country. His one virtue was that—perhaps because he found more victims at his numerous other clubs—he really visited the Players' rather rarely.

His name wasn't Wearhardt Jackson. So we'll call him Jackson Wearhardt.

Well, on the wall at the first landing of Edwin Booth's old home—the home of the Players' Club—there hung an antique fire-extinguisher accompanied by a huge fireman's ax and sundry other contemporaneous apparatus for flame-fighting whereon the house-committee had placed a sign to warn the lighter minded members that these articles were

"FOR USE ONLY IN CASE OF FIRE."

After a particularly trying session in the torture-chamber of Jackson Wearhardt's presence, Herford solemnly mounted to that landing, altered the placard with artistic care and placed it squarely upon the ax.

The sign now read:

"FOR USE ONLY IN CASE JACKSON WEARHARDT."

Herford could make more peppery comments than that, too. Loyal to his English Midlands' boyhood—or had his been the equally militant boyhood of Manchester?—he considered that any member of any theater-audience possessed the sacred right of criticizing any performance during the performance. The Post-Impressionist will long remember the evening when—with Herford, Charles Hanson Towne and Louis How—he went to a variety-show to see the first appearance in vaudeville of Oliver's sister, that inimitable imitator, Beatrice Herford.

Her appearance was preceded by a pair of what were then called "female impersonators." Indeed, they were rather too much that. Oliver's moral sense revolted. He stood up in the box and, to the delight of the whole house, he vociferously and unequivocally denounced them.

Himself, Oliver was popular as a guest anywhere, but particularly at lunches and dinners. He loved the role, yet did not like to play it before stupid people—and, as anybody who has read "The Cynic's Calendar" and "The Herford Aesop" must admit—his opinion of the general intelligence was none too high. He was constantly, however, pestered by invitations from persons whose persistence was in inverse ratio to their social sense.

* * *

"This is Mr. Buggins."

"Yes?"

"You'll remember that I met you at the Jugginses' tea yesterday."

"Oh, perfectly—perfectly. How could I forget Mr. Buggins?"

"Well, I was wondering if you couldn't lunch—very informally indeed—with me and a few of my friends at 1 o'clock at the Lotus Club tomorrow: that's Monday, you know."

"Monday? Is it, really?" Herford was gaining time to invent a lie. "Let me look at my engagement book . . . Monday? I'm so sorry: I'm booked for my dentist's at 1 tomorrow."

"But we can make it earlier, in that case."

"Dear me, no: I couldn't enjoy even a luncheon with you when the dentist was in the offing."

"Then why not later?"

"Dentists always completely exhaust me."

As for Buggins, he was inexhaustible. "Tuesday, perhaps?"

"Ah, well, let me see. Tut, tut: I find that I have an engagement with my publisher for the whole of Tuesday."

It turned out that Oliver was going from town on Wednesday—for the entire day.

"Then, Mr. Herford," pleaded Mr. Buggins, "how about Thursday?"

Oliver had reached the end of even his ingenuity. "Oh, well!" he sighed, "I'll lunch with you tomorrow!"

Chicago Bout Among Laugh Hits.

New York, Aug. 9.

THOSE who saw the battle of the lithe, lean bodies at the White Sox ball yard in which Joe Louis conquered King Levinsky have rated this struggle high up in the list of funny prize fights. It is to be hoped, however, that there will be no ill-considered attempts to claim for this one the distinction which rightfully belongs to the contest between Fainting Phil Scott, of London, and Jack Sharkey, of Boston, the model husband and father, who made a successful career of spectacular failure.

Levinsky is funny in a fat soggy way, and it would be unfair to deny him a certain provincial honor for sitting on the ropes with his hands in his laps and complaining that the dark man hit too hard. However, this was not entirely original, as Tommy Loughran broke off in a meeting with Sharkey one night in New York years before, to ask the referee for a chair, as he wished to sit down and think things out.

• • • •

SHARKEY and Fainting Phil Scott were elected to meet in Miami on a balmy winter evening to decide the heavyweight championship runneruptcy by order of the New York prize fight commission in recognition of a long series of hilarious failures. Fainting Philip had been knocked out in one round by Knute Hansen in his American debut in Madison Square Garden. As a reward for this he was matched with an Italian named Roberto Roberti, and the pair of them cuddled their way through ten affectionate rounds in the presence of $60,000 worth of trade. The prize fight commission, under the chairmanship of James A. Farley, now decided that Fainting Philip deserved a match with Otto von Porat, and the patrons of the sport, warming to the droll charm of the long, limp Englishman, paid $97,000 to watch him discourse his master performance to date. In this, he sank to the floor in round two, rubbing his hip and emitting anguished cries of "Foul!" Fainting Philip had now played to a gross business of $195,000 with a record so humorous that the prize fight commission recognized him as the logical contender for the logical contendership. The other candidate for the logical contendership, naturally, was Mr. Sharkey, whose record spoke for itself.

• • • •

AFTER his first fight in New York, in which he seemed indifferent and bored, he had been summoned to explain his attitude and had frankly admitted that he wasn't a very good fighter.

Thereafter he won an affair which was regarded by many as a mockery, in which Jack Delaney got down on all fours and hollered "woof" while Sharkey reeled along the ropes overcome by emotion, sobbing like Modjecka. Then he stretched himself out, refusing to get up in a fight with Dempsey which cost the patrons $1,000,000. He had fouled Max Schmeling in a $750,000 production and had been very bashful in a gentle ten-rounder with Willie Stribling in Miami which cost $400,000 more. Altogether, to witness Mr. Sharkey at his more noted failures, the patrons had separated themselves from about $2,250,000. This imposing total and the fact that he was still fresh from his master failure to date, the fouling of Schmeling, made him the other logical contender for the logical contendership in the judgment of Mr. Farley, who was accustomed to thinking of other people's money in large figures even then.

• • • •

IN Miami, Fainting Philip and Sharkey both were funny, whereas in Chicago Mr. Levinsky alone furnished the humor. In Miami, Mr. Sharkey lost no time fouling Philip, fetching him a sharp dig at the first bell. Fainting Philip went in his swoon at once and Sharkey ran around the ring screaming vulgar remarks. Philip was revived and induced to ignore the foul and Mr. Sharkey promptly hit him another one south of the line. They went on through the second round, Mr. Sharkey punching for the knees and Philip flopping with low, anguished moans until finally, in round three, the London fireman uttered one final howl and lay flat, a lithe, lean body crumpled in the dust dripping little puddles of tears on the canvas. Mr. Sharkey, always emotional, was shrieking, too, and flouncing around the ring with tears streaming down his face and bad language pouring from his lips.

The customers, who had paid $206,000 for this one, got up silently and went back to the speakeasies to get drunk and forget the spectacle of two strong, primitive fighting men, trained to the minute, and the embodiment of the ideals of chivalry and courage, screaming, weeping, reeling, fainting and making faces at one another in battle for the highest bauble in fistiana's realm, as the heavyweight championship then was called.

Always consistent, Mr. Farley awarded the logical contendership to Sharkey, who then won the title from Max Schmeling by a bad decision after a worse fight, and lost it a year later when Primo Carnera hit him a slap in the face.

Fainting Philip went home to England and hasn't returned up to now, but if funny fights are drawing $200,000 again he may be back for a revival of the battle of the crybabies, the laugh hit of the age.

Mr. Rockefeller

By

William Lyon Phelps

AS he has succeeded in everything he has attempted, he will probably succeed in living to be 100; and I think everyone hopes he will. He has only four years to go, having celebrated his ninety-sixth birthday this summer.

When that grand old man and lover of humanity, Nathan Straus, was on his deathbed, I had the privilege of a most interesting conversation with him. Among other things which I shall always remember, he spoke with the highest admiration of Mr. Rockefeller, saying that he had set an example for all rich men; that he had not only given away enormous sums, but had spent as much care and effort in giving these sums wisely, as he had on his own investments.

• • • •

I remember when I was a young man, talking with George M. Pullman, who told me that Mr. Rockefeller was making it necessary for all men of great wealth to use their wealth for the benefit of mankind.

The New York Times had an editorial the other day, in which it was pointed out that this was the only method of "sharing the wealth" that accurately fitted the phrase. I think most persons, if they reflected on the matter, would rather have large sums of money given for the public welfare by successful men of affairs who knew how to distribute it, than to have it left in the hands of politicians.

The Old Welch Wizard

Political Prestidigitation Of Lloyd George Just Effective Enough To Put A Mild Fear Into Hearts Of Conservatives Who Are Otherwise Assured Of Success At Polls.

By Edward Acheson.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE is a sprightly soul. With each one of his "positively last appearances" things invariably brighten up, and now the dim lethargy which has characterized British politics in the last three years is again shattered by wizardry of the Welshman. But it's not very good wizardry: this current exhibition isn't really up to standard.

Had anyone else organized the churches into a "Council of Action for Peace and Reconstruction," the labor leaders would have joined the Tories in one long laugh before renewing their perennial battle. It is a great personal compliment to the Lloyd George genius that, as head of such a vague and intangible movement, he can still keep political dopesters awake at night.

Unanimously they dismiss him. He's through. He can't "do it again." He's dishing up the old '29 program. The situation is perfectly clear. Labor will get 240 seats in the election in November and the present government will "carry on" with a clear majority. But always, at the end, they tuck in a sentence starting out, "Unless, of course——," and that sentence gives the show away. Lloyd George has the most disconcerting habit of marching along at the head of somebody's else parade until he's mistaken for the leader. And then he is the leader.

• • • •

THE Conservatives are very well aware of this. They turned down his proposals with a great finality. Officially, the Labor Party is having none of him. He is doing his own private snarling at the government, threatening dire things, and promising to put 350 candidates into the field in the next general election. No one takes all this very seriously. There is the question of personnel. There is the question of money. Actually, it's very unimportant—unless, of course——

At this point the more cautious of the commentators point out that George Lansbury, the leader of the Labor Party in the House of Commons, sat on the platform with Mr. Lloyd George at his recent organization rally, and in matters of party politics no one has yet called Mr. George Lansbury a fool.

Besides, there are two other men who are not usually found sponsoring lost causes. Sir Basil Blackett, a director of the Bank of England, is not addicted to backing vague sentiments of good will toward men; he is an exceedingly astute man. And Labor leaders such as Mr. W. J. Brown have their own Socialist peace and reconstruction policy upon which to vent their human sympathies without borrowing a cause from Mr. Lloyd George.

• • • •

THE presence and support of those men does give the "council" a slightly more serious aspect, but logically it would appear that there was no place in the present British scheme of things for a revived Liberal party. The Labor movement is, of course, avowedly, a Socialist movement, but it is by no means controlled by the Socialist League. Men of the stamp of Mr. Herbert Morrison, Dr. Hugh Dalton and the now Sir Walter Citrine give the party a decidedly more practical and "progressive" hue as distinct from the Marxian red-Bolshevik complexion their opponents would have the electorate envisage when they consider the Labor Party.

This is apparent from the difficulties which are presented to Mr. Lloyd George in formulating the questionnaire which he is to submit to all candidates at the next election. Either it is to be so vague that all aspirants can answer in the affirmative—the do-you-believe-in-peace sort of thing—or else it will be directed against the government. To every plank of the Lloyd George program a Labor candidate can reply, "Yes, but more so," for the peace and reconstruction campaign is nothing more than a tempered socialism.

The only real danger in Lloyd George activities is the possibility of confusion. Skillfully placed to cause three-cornered races in certain constituencies, his candidates can be of enormous value to Labor and a thorn in the side of the so-called National Party. This fact, in turn, may, and if operative, will, force the government into a more strenuous campaign, to measures such as the Zinoviev Letter and general panic-mongering.

THE very last thing England wants at this juncture is manufactured excitement. The foreign situation provides gratuitously all the uncertainty that is necessary. A normal, and very normal, election, in which confidence is shaken as little as possible, would be the ideal, and the super-subtle among the commentators see in the various "progressive" movements a lightning rod to draw off the electoral anger of the malcontents.

The number of the malcontents is not decreasing. The long-awaited speech of the new minister of labor, Mr. Ernest Brown was a thoroughgoing "dud." In spite of improved employment for the country as a whole, the north of England is dying of dry rot; a commissioner, Sir Malcolm Stewart, was appointed, with a ridiculously small amount of money, to do something about it. His report said in effect that he couldn't bail out a ship with a teaspoon. So the government appointed a committee to see whether the commissioner hadn't been "misinformed." The utter barrenness of such a maneuver drew from Mr. Harold Macmillan, one of the younger Tories, the remark that the speech "had produced such a depression of spirit upon the supporters of the government as they had not known during this Parliament."

Presumably, it had the same effect on the country at large. Hence, it is argued that Mr. Macmillan's "progressive" group within the Tory Party, under the banner of "Liberty and Democracy," and Mr. Lloyd George's clamor for "Peace and Reconstruction" are safety valves, giving disgusted "national" supporters an alternative, other than Socialism, to the arid and unimaginative program of the orthodox Tories.

THAT the investing public, at least, believes something in the nature of public works is to be undertaken can be adjudged from the fact that electrical and cement shares have joined the aeroplane industry's securities in a respectable rise. But in the former couple the advance is due more to hope than to earnings.

No indication has been given by anyone near the Government that a policy other than the present stalling-for-time is to be substituted. Half measures such as the extension of the London underground and the electrification of some few miles of railway surface line will be widely publicized from time to time. But with a "sure win" already indicated at the next election, Mr. Baldwin sees no reason for getting himself involved in the uncharted waters of public works, a course, which to the English mind, invariably suggests the "planned economy" of the Socialist Party.

Hence, barring acts of God and Lloyd George, the present Government will, in all probability be doing business at exactly the same old stand before and after the coming election. The only difference will be that an opposition of 55 will be replaced by one of 240 and the complacency of the cabinet will have to be twice as studied to look half as natural.

No End of Books

Another City of Refuge.

YESTERDAY I wrote of Stark Young's far-off city of felicity. William Seabrook's city of refuge was of a far more actual literal sort. Traveler in Haiti, the jungle, Arabia and the Sahara, he was back in his Riviera home two years ago drinking himself to perdition. And he knew it. With a regenerative faculty, which is in itself remarkable, he went to New York and had himself committed to a large and famous insane asylum which would undertake to cure a dipsomaniac case. There he stayed for seven months of the strangest adventuring he had ever met. When he came out, a new man, he wrote the story down—frankly and fully.

"Asylum" (Harcourt Brace, $2) is in several ways a remarkable book. Mr. Seabrook may somewhat deprecatingly call himself a mere "reporter," but he has brought before us, with all the clarity and vividness one could ask, the picture of what the days are like in one of these modern "mental hospitals," as they choose to call it.

The mother-and-nursery-tot air, the clinical coolness, the care for the smallest psychological turns—that is the broad effect. More picturesque are his reports of the patients themselves—their camraderie, their quite unselfconscious amusement over the mad antics of their fellows, and their curious calm acceptance of their situation. We meet the man who was cured of melancholia by a punch on the jaw, the gilded youth from Boston's Back Bay who had nothing wrong with him but uncontrollable arrogance, the mad young man who could write Joycean prose better than Joyce. We see the sedate Saturday night dances of patients and attendants where the only rule is that insane must dance with sane; the nurse leading a long line of silent melancholics (the most horrible sight in the place) in single file through the grounds; the occasional mad outbursts of the patients, and the baseball game where the man who has struck out suddenly flaps his arms and crows like a rooster. Through it all runs Mr. Seabrook's solid appreciation of the worth of these modern institutions.

BUT he himself is even more interesting. With sterling candor he reports his thoughts as he tries to trace out the source of his drinking. He found it, where any man will find it, in a neurotic maladjustment. He says that as he began to draw close to 50 he was overcome with a fear that he might not be as good a writer as he had hoped to be, that indeed he would never reach that ideal. Not facing squarely that sad though perfectly human problem, finding himself overly self-conscious and stalemated when he sat down to his typewriter, the normal drinking in which he had indulged loomed larger and larger, more and more imperious, as an escape.

No man is a drunkard, he says, until he has to drink whether he wants to or not. The deciding line, in dipsomania and every other mania, is the power of control. And because never, until he passed these months in the asylum, had he faced his battle on the ground where it had to be fought—on his accepting his own responsibility for himself—he never in even his most strong-willed efforts of abstention came within miles of cure.

For in "Asylum," there is nothing of more pith and point than Mr. Seabrook's honest underlining of the fact that the brown bottle is never the cause of drinking. It is only a symptom—one more city of refuge.

ALTHOUGH the Druidic religion is dead and gone, the picturesque ceremonies of this ancient cult still persist in Brittany, and every year a "Gorsedd of Bards" is staged, with poets from Wales, Ireland and Scotland participating.

This year, the "Gorsedd" (which can be defined as an international poetry contest in Celtic language) is to be held during the final days of July at Quimperle, not far from Carnac, the French "Stonehenge." Contestants will submit poems in Breton, while bards from Scotland, Wales and Ireland will be permitted to submit theirs in their own languages which resemble, in many ways, the Breton tongue.

Several French senators from Brittany, who speak French when addressing the austere senate, will attend the Quimperle "Gorsedd" and use the Breton language for their oratory. It is estimated that about 3,000,000 Bretons speak Breton as their primary language for daily use, although all of them can resort to French if necessary.

Long Exposes Another Plot Upon His Life

By the Associated Press.

Senator Long (Democrat) Louisiana, told the Senate yesterday a story of what he considered a half-conceived plot to "kill him in the Senate."

The story came piecemeal from what Long described as sound recording-device reports of three conferences of anti-Long men in the De Soto Hotel in New Orleans July 21 and 22.

The report disclosed, he said, that among those present at the first meeting were Moreland Meadows; Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley, of New Orleans; Representatives Montet (Democrat), Louisiana, and John Sandlin (Democrat), Louisiana; M. H. Sandlin, Oscar Whilden, head of the "Square Deal League;" Warren Jefferson, who was described by Long as "distributor" of Federal funds in Louisiana, and "now on the Federal pay roll;" Rufus Fontenot, collector of internal revenue, and Frank Peterman, FERA administrator.

At this opening conference, Long said the report disclosed that Whilden initiated the discussion of killing by asserting:

"I am out to murder, kill, bulldoze, steal, or anything else to win this election."

Long Uses Sarcasm.

"I wonder," Long said, "if the President's representatives dissented to this?"

At that conference, he added, plans were made to "blackmail" the voters and Long leaders by means of income tax suits and allotment of jobs on Federal projects.

The talk of "shooting" the Senator, Long said, came the next day at a final meeting at which Whilden was present with several others. Neither Mayor Walmsley nor the Congressmen were at this third conference, he said.

The sound-device reports, he continued, were made by Herbert W. Christenberry, a brother of the Senator's secretary, and "a gentleman by the name of Casson, who is the secretary of the State Senate." Both, Long said, were men of repute in Louisiana.

In describing the third meeting, he quoted mostly from "voices" which he said "they were never able to identify."

New Orleans, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Who plotted this time to murder Senator Huey P. Long?

"Not I," said Mayor Walmsley. "I was at the meeting a short time that Sunday morning. As far as I am concerned, the Senator is drunk again."

"Not I," said George W. Hardy, former Mayor of Shreveport. "I attended the meeting Monday, but no such plan was suggested. However, since he has suggested it, I don't think it would be such a bad idea, and I, for one, should certainly make no objection."

Sounds Like Hooey.

"Not I," said Francis Williams, head of the Anti-Long Jackson Democratic Clubs. "I didn't attend those meetings. However, it sounds like a lot of hooey to me."

The De Soto Hotel management didn't care to say who had room 506 on July 21.

The present "murder plot" is the third Long has discovered against his person in seven months. The last time he "got a bomb" at his Washington office. Last January it was a "plot" to ambush him for slaughter on the Baton Rouge-New Orleans highway.

Roosevelt Gives Assent to Policy For Air Bases

President Favors Bill of Wilcox, but Is Hesitant Over Expenditures.

Plans for the expansion of American aerial power moved another step forward yesterday when President Roosevelt revealed at his press conference that he would approve the Wilcox air-base bill authorizing the construction of a string of air fields around the country's borders.

The big airports would be used for defensive concentrations of the fast and heavily armed planes making up the combat wings of the newly organized General Headquarters Air Force.

The bill carries no appropriation, being merely an authorization for such a construction program. Military authorities have estimated that the bases would cost an estimated $120,000,000.

Backers of the measure, including its author, Representative Mark Wilcox (Democrat), of Florida, are hopeful of getting funds from the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund. However, the President expressed doubt at his conference yesterday that any of the works funds could be used for this purpose.

In stating to reporters that he would approve the bill, the President compared it to the Vinson big Navy bill. He questioned the propriety of committing the Government to the necessary future expenditures, adding that he felt that the measure should be considered as an enunciation of policy rather than as a construction program.

While the Wilcox bill was being considered in Congress, the President reprimanded Chairman John J. McSwain (Democrat), of South Carolina, of the House Military Affairs Committee, after testimony at secret hearings, interpreted as unfriendly to Canada, leaked out.

According to records made public, Brig. Gen. Charles E. Kilbourne intimated that there was a "camouflage" provision in the measure permitting the construction of an air base on the Canadian border.

Betrothal of German Princess Is Denied

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP).—Gen. von Dommes, administrator of the Hohenzollern house, today denied reports that Princess Hermine was blocking Princess Carmos' desire to marry a man named Wunderlich.

"This report is utter nonsense," said the general. "There is no word of truth about it. Princess Carmos empowered me to say on her behalf she was not even thinking of becoming engaged to Herr Wunderlich." Wunderlich is a former secretary to Hermine.

Recipients of Relief Not Allowed to Wed

New Castle, Pa., Aug. 9 (AP).—Love and love alone is not enough to get a marriage license in Lawrence County—one also must be off the relief rolls.

R. M. Campbell, clerk of the court, decreed this recently and disclosed today that his latest refusal for a license was on application of a couple he described as "minors" whose families were on relief.

"I don't think it's right for them to marry and, until the court orders different, I won't issue a license to any I know are depending on the county or the city for their upkeep," declared the clerk.

Hot Words Fly At House Probe Of Store Setup

McLean Threatens to Quit Unless Patman Alters Procedure.

By the Associated Press.

Dissension and heated words broke yesterday among members of a special House committee investigating "super-lobbies" and chain-store practices.

At one point Representative McLean (Republican), New Jersey, threatened to resign from the committee unless Chairman Patman (Democrat), Texas, changed his method of conducting the inquiry.

Patman had to dismiss the witness Robert W. Lyons, Washington representative of 14 large chain-store systems, until the committee, in executive session, could smooth over somewhat ruffled tempers.

The trouble arose first over a suggestion by Patman that correspondence taken from Lyons' files be printed for confidential use of the committee, and that Lyons be given a copy and called back to be asked about it later on.

Evidence Contested.

There was another dispute about the introduction of material from the same files which some committee members said might be interpreted unjustly to mean that the Governor and other high officials of Texas had been influenced by chain-store lobbyists.

Earlier, Lyons had declined to answer questions without being subpenaed. Nor would he go into details as to whether he paid lawyers in Texas, New Mexico and other States to fight legislation distasteful to the chains. Later, however, he said he had hired men to oppose what he considered unjust legislation.

"Let Him Resign."

When McLean objected to Patman's manner of asking questions, and threatened to resign, Patman snapped back, "If he wants to resign, it's all right with me."

He said he merely wanted to pick out information that would show attempts in six States, which he did not name, to block legislation, or, if that was unsuccessful, to put it in unconstitutional form.

Lyons had told the committee he would not hesitate to attempt to amend a measure so that it would be unconstitutional if he considered it inequitable and unconscionable and that he considered such procedure "perfectly ethical."

Theft Victims Fail To View Suspects

Only 5 of 15 Summoned See 10 in Police Line-up.

For several days police have been holding ten colored men whom they are inclined to blame for a recetn epidemic of strong-arm robberies here.

Last night the suspects were lined up at headquarters for possible identification by victims. But only five of the 15 victims showed up and there were no positive identifications.

Detective Inspector Frank S. W. Burke then announced that the suspects would be lined up for identification again at 7:30 o'clock tonight, and expressed the hope that the balance of the victims would appear.

Frankfort, Ind., Aug. 9 (AP).—Frank Nace, 50, street department employe, whose alleged attack on a 9-year-old girl brought a threat of mob violence here Tuesday night, received a life sentence when he pleaded guilty today. He was taken immediately to the Michigan City prison.

Roosevelt Bars Relief to All WPA Strikers

City, where the executive council of the American Federation of Labor is meeting, that union labor will continue its opposition to the "subsistence wage," which in some localities is as low as $19 a month.

"We expressed our views on the security wage before Congress when we asked them to pass the McCarran amendment," Green told the United Press.

"We warned them of what would happen and it is beginning to happen.

"We have done all we can. Our policy is known and we intend to take no further action."

McGrady in Cleveland.

Meanwhile, Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, was in Cleveland attempting to avert a situation similar to that existing in New York. Relief money, which has just been released for Ohio, is expected to put 4,000 persons to work in Cleveland next week unless labor troubles interfere.

The Government also was moving to settle the strike at the Camden, N. J., plant of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation. After conferences with Henry L. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Secretary Perkins, President Roosevelt indicated that an arbitration board would be named today. Secretary Perkins predicted resumption of work pending settlement of differences, which include demands for wage increases and for a closed shop.

WPA Wage Scale Assailed.

In connection with WPA difficulties, the United Press reported from Newark, N. J., that the Essex County Building Trades Council had voted to forbid its members to work on WPA jobs at the "subsistence wage."

In Des Moines, Iowa, the State labor federation president called for a labor protest meeting against the WPA wage scale. In Harrisburg, Pa., the Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor and the Pennsylvania Security League circulated petitions appealing to President Roosevelt to intercede.

Thomas Murray, president of the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York and chairman of the executive strike committee, was quoted by the Associated Press as saying that all of the 15,000 union men on relief jobs would walk out Monday.

"We will do all we can to let the public realize that labor is fighting for a wage sufficient to take care of its families," he said.

A conviction that union workers in other cities would fall in line behind the New York strike as soon as WPA projects get under way in other parts of the country was voiced by George Meany, president of the New York State Federation of Labor.

Meany said he did not know how many men had been taken off the job by flying squadrons of union men during the day, but he declared the number would continue to increase.

It was reported that New York City's home relief appropriation for August had been cut from $19,000,000 to $11,000,000 and that no more would be available.

David Lasser, national chairman of the Workers Alliance of America, told the Associated Press that 500,000 relief workers in 30 States would take part in mass demonstrations and parades August 17.

One of the difficulties being encountered in New York and elsewhere arises from the fact that on PWA jobs workers are employed by contractors and paid prevailing wages. On WPA jobs, in close proximity to PWA jobs, workers are paid only "subsistence" wages for the same kind of labor.

Meanwhile, relief agencies were running into other difficulties. On one hand, they are experiencing trouble in persuading men to join the CCC to bring its strength up to the anticipated enrollment of 600,000, and on the other they are experiencing difficulty in finding sufficient employment for white-collar workers.

With 328,000 CCC enlistments necessary to bring the organization to its full strength, only 135,260 men thus far have enrolled. Hopkins has laid down the requirement that all men enrolled must come from families on relief. No difficulty would be experienced, officials said, if unemployed men not on relief could be enrolled, but this would not conform with the plan to make the CCC one of the agencies in the program to put 3,500,000 persons on relief to work.

Hopkins announced that there are 528,000 so-called white-collar workers on relief, and that the proportion of white-collar workers applying for relief is increasing.

"Before the depression it was usually assumed the relief population was entirely from the lower economic groups," Hopkins said. "Our figures show this situation is changing. Obviously, employment must be provided for this group, the kind of work they are capable of doing."

Hopkins said plans already are under way to widen the scope of works projects to provide more white-collar employment. Many of them will be absorbed in various census and statistical projects.

$58 Relief a Month Too Little, They Say

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia was sued today by a couple who seek an increase in their home relief allotment.

The couple, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Nahoum, said they had four children and that the $58.20 a month which they receive is insufficient.

After setting aside $35.50 for food and rent, they said, they have only $22.70, or $5.50 a week to providt the family with clothing, ice, medicines and other incidentals.

A mandamus action will be argued in Brooklyn Supreme Court on August 27.

Willard Roof Players to Open Season on Wednesday Evening

'East Lynne' Will Be Presented at National Press Club Under Sponsorship of President's Cup Regatta Association.

A gala first night for the Willard Roof Players is being planned for Wednesday evening at 8:30 o'clock on the National Press Club roof, when the President's Cup Regatta Association, Inc., will sponsor the production of the melodrama, "East Lynne."

The play is a reflection of one of the most interesting periods in American social history, the bustle era of the gay nineties. Although English in origin, it met with intense popularity when played as a serious melodrama in this country and has become immortalized as perhaps the outstanding example of popular dramatic entertainment 40 years ago.

The Willard Roof Players have recruited virtually the same cast that so successfully produced a revival of "The Drunkard" on the Willard roof last summer and then proceeded to Baltimore for a successful run there.

The cast, consisting almost wholly of professionals, is headed by Mrs. Harriet Borden, in the role of Lady Isabel, and Mr. Robert Pitkin, in the role of Lord Levinson. Others having important roles are Miss Margaret Hatfield, Miss Katherine Dirkin, Mrs. Mary Minnix, Mr. Forney Reese, Mr. Isham Keith, jr., Mr. John Siken, Mr. David Pritchard, Mr. Robert D'Orsay and Mr. Richard Midgely.

Stage settings are being prepared by the European scenic artist, Hugo Inden. The players will be fully costumed incident to the period.

The opening night will be solely for the benefit of the President's Cup Regatta Association.

Capital's Lucy Stoners Disagree With Bard's Answer to His Query, 'What's In a Name?'

Chic Lingerie Of Hand Made Silk Displayed

Stunning Garments Offered at Shop on Connecticut Avenue.

By Dudley Harmon.

Pinch Hitting for Ruth Anne Davis.

THOSE WHO ENJOY an occasional orgy of lingerie buying should rush to a Connecticut avenue shop which is having an amazing sale of silk underwear and negligees. This store has a reputation for discriminating choice in lingerie, and here is your chance to snap up some of their loveliest numbers for virtually nothing.

Among the things we went for were some stunning silk nightgowns on sale at only $2.95, reduced from $3.95, $4.95 and $5.95. They are made of pure, heavy silk, without a thread of rayon, and some are fluffy, others tailored. For those who like high-hat nighties, there's a marvelous thing with real Alencon lace scattered here and there. Reduced from $5.95 to $3.95, it's really much too stunning to be confined to a bedroom.

All their stuff is handmade, down to the last inch. Tiny, fine stitches that look as though they had been done with the aid of a microscope give these pretties the distinction of the Rue de la Paix. Handmade underwear lasts so much longer, too, and there's far less danger of bursting out the seams.

In the petticoat department our eye was caught by some very handsome slips which may be had for as little as $1.95. They were formerly priced as high as $4.95. They, too, are made of pure silk, and are hemstitched or edged with really good lace.

Bathing Suits Reduced.

IF THE mention of bathing suits this late in the season arouses in you anything more than a bored yawn, run down to a local department store and look at their very swell rubber bathing suits which they are selling for only 74 cents. They come in five of the best-looking models seen this side of Atlantic City. Some have criss-crossed backs, others little bow ties, and all are one-piece. They come in that pebbly crepe material, which wears so much better than ordinary rubber.

Attractive Accessories.

THIS IS the time of year when accessories take on an increased importance. One has become a trifle weary on one's summer clothes, and they, too, have taken on a look which seems to say that they, themselves, are faintly tired of it all. Yet it's hard to know what to do about the situation, for it's too early to don fall clothes.

Why not brighten up your clothes with some attractive accessories? The other day in a downtown store we spotted some gay belts and buttons which ought to do wonders toward taking that dispirited air away from your dresses. They're very new and show the Hawaiian influence, which, they tell us, is making itself felt in the fashion world.

The belts come in two kinds, flat and rope. The former is made up in an attractive zigzag pattern. The rope is very useful because it can also be draped around your chapeau. Both belts are made out of koa seed. We don't know exactly what it is, but it certainly sounds Hawaiian.

The buttons come with buckles to match. Both are made of coconut shell. One design comes in the shape of a little fat fish, most fetching. They're very light weight, and wear well. The price of the buttons ranges from $1.75 to $3.50 a dozen, and the belts cost $1.50.

Ruth Anne Davis has compiled a list of 20 aids to summer beauty, with the names of the shops where these cosmetics can be purchased. This leaflet will be sent on receipt of a 2-cent stamp. Address Miss Davis in care of The Washington Post.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I would like very much to take a course in domestic science. I am a married woman and interested in taking the course for use in my own home—not as a teacher. Do you know of a first-class school giving such a course in the District of Columbia? Could I enter as a special student?

* * * *

I have heard of a number of women who are interested in taking a course of this kind. It seems too bad that Washington does not have a school similar to the Boston Cooking School. Perhaps they have one here. Do you mind giving me this information Very truly yours, SUBSCRIBER.

Some Suggestions.

DEAR SUBSCRIBER: The local Y. W. C. A. offers a course of study in domestic science. The fall semester opens October 7 and continues until February 1. The second semester, opening February 3, continues until the end of May. The classes are offered once a week, either daytime or evening. Daytime classes are from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. on Wednesdays, and the evening classes are from 5:30 to 8:30 p. m. on Mondays. The price is $8 for the semester.

* * * *

Incidentally, the "Y" offers more than a score of courses of special study during the winter months, among them one called "Successful Marriage," from 7 to 8 p. m. every Wednesday (price, $2.50), and another dealing with "Interior Decorating" from 8 to 9 p. m. on Thursdays.

* * * *

You can make arrangements to enroll in the class of your choice by visiting the education department, sixth floor of the "Y" main building at Seventeenth and K streets northwest, and talking with the education secretary.

* * * *

If you prefer university tutoring, George Washington University admits as special students in its home economics departments any applicants who are past the age of 21. The first semester opens September 25. For detailed information telephone National 6462, admissions office, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. any day except Saturday; or call personally at the office, which is at 2033 G street northwest. There may be other universities in the District offering a similar course. You can find out by telephoning the admissions office of any of the local universities. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Teacher's Pet Has Hard Time In Later Life

The goody-goody child who becomes teachers' pet in school frequently has a hard time of it in later life, Dr. J. Mace Andress, editor of the School and Health Department of Hygeia, believes.

In an address before the Association for Childhood Education, meeting at Swampscott, Mass., Dr. Andress declared teachers and parents should encourage self-reliance and self-direction in children. He said:

"We are beginning to realize that often 'things are not what they seem' in the world of childhood.

"As a striking example of this, we know that so-called perfect pupils who frequently become teachers' pets are badly adjusted.

"To stimulate self-reliance and self-direction requires rare insight, tact and understanding of children. If the teacher is to be a good social engineer she must understand the inner life of children much better than she has in the past."

Soda Sipper Straw Hats.

Longchamp (AP). — Soda sipper straw hats are next. They appeared at the races in broad-brimmed models made of the same straws used for sodas, coiled round and round. Most of them were black trimmed with a small cluster of bright flowers.

Harris & Ewing.

Harris & Ewing.

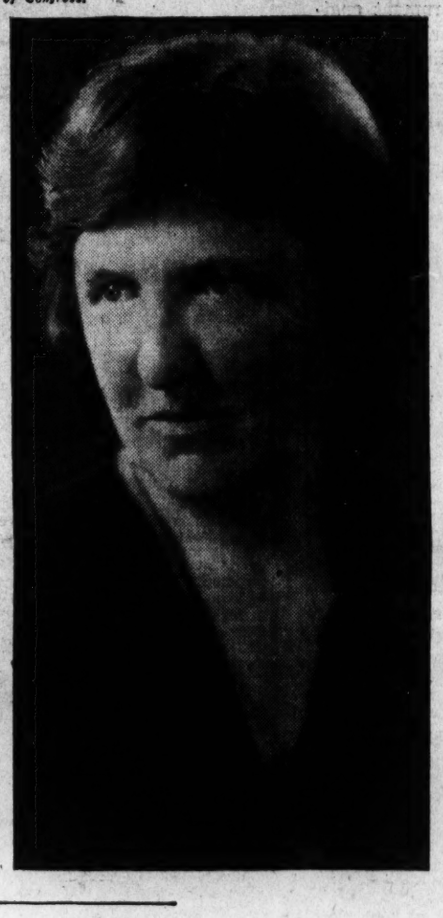
Harris & Ewing.



Harris & Ewing.

Maiden Name Advocates Could Ask Little More Than Representation Frances Perkins Gives Them

Labor Secretary Has Done Much to Overcome Old Prejudice.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?" asked Shakespeare. Then implied there was nothing at all by suggesting "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

But the Lucy Stoners of the world would hardly consider that a satisfactory answer. A name, they maintain, makes a good deal of difference. Furthermore, they feel that the loss of a woman's maiden name by marriage is the symbol of the loss of her individuality, and that it is not advisable to annex a "Mrs." with a wedding ring.

Miss Frances Perkins is, of course, the most obvious of the Capital's current crop of Lucy Stoners. The wife of Paul Wilson and the mother of a grown daughter, she is still not a "Mrs."

Her adherence to a principle first established by a pioneer feminist has, in numerous instances, elicited criticism. As soon as she was appointed to the Cabinet, there were ominous rumblings on Capitol Hill. If she was a married woman, how could she be a "Miss?" asked Congressmen, who had never heard of Lucy Stone and the maiden-name league. If she were legally married and had a daughter, how could she have the effrontery to call herself "Miss?" This question was asked by a certain "lame duck" Representative, who clapped his hands in glee, mentally licked his chops and prophesied the "woman Cabinet member would encounter plenty of difficulty in office over her signature."

An Ideal Representative.

But did she? Not that Washington or the hinterlands have heard of. But what she has done in the way of selling the maiden-name idea to the world! What more could the Lucy Stoners ask than to have a representative in the Cabinet?

Becoming a "Mrs." just because she married never once occurred to Miss Anita Pollitzer, vice chairman of the National Woman's Party. "Your name's your name from the day you're born," she said by way of explanation. "It's your trademark, your stamp of individuality." Her husband, Elie Charlier Edson, widely known press representative, is of the same opinion, and there was never any argument in the Edson-Pollitzer household about the wife's name.

"When we got to the first hotel after we were married, I forgot to register. Later, I told my husband I had forgotten. 'That's all right,' he said, 'I signed for you.'

"'What name did you use?' I asked. 'Why, your own, Anita Pollitzer, of course,' he replied. That was the only time we ever discussed the subject."

Husband Insisted She Keep Name.

Another husband who is completely sold on the Lucy Stone idea is Albert Leavitt, of the Department of Justice. His wife, Miss Elsie Hill, was an outstanding feminist long before they were married, but that is not the chief reason she is still "Miss" today. "It's rather because I insisted she should keep her own name," said Mr. Leavitt. "Why should any woman submerge her identity by adopting her husband's name?"

Her desire to retain her identity was the reason Miss Caroline Ware, of the National Emergency Administration, did not take her husband's name and become Mrs. Gardiner Means after her marriage. Formerly a teacher of history at Vassar College and an established writer ("Greenwich Village" is her latest published book), her maiden name already had a certain significance in educational and literary circles. Later, as Miss Caroline Ware, she obtained a position on the faculty of the University of Wyoming, but when the trustees discovered she was married, they broke her contract. Now Miss Ware is contemplating a suit against the university.

"It's a matter of principle," she said.

Whether or not they are out and out Lucy Stoners, there are numbers of newspaper women in Washington who retain their professional identity by the manden-name route. Among htese are Miss Ruby Black (Mrs. Herbert Little), who heads her own news bureau; Miss Ruth Finney (Mrs. Robert S. Allen), of the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance; Miss Bess Furman (Mrs. Robert B. Armstrong, jr.), of the Associated Press; Miss Mabelle Jennings (Mrs. Osgood Roberts), of the Washington Herald staff, and Miss Frances Mangum (Mrs. R. K. Von Lewinski), of The Washington Post staff.

Miss Hatfield's Case Unique.

Unique among the real Lucy Stoners in Washington is Miss Margaret Hatfield, who became a member of the league a number of years after she married.

Although she was widely known as an actress before her marriage to Stuart Chase she took her husband's name because, as she explained it, "I didn't know I had a legal right to retain my own name. But even then I resented being a mere appendage to my husband. I felt my name was the symbol of my identity, my individuality."

Later, while she was still "Mrs. Chase," she informed her friends of her intention and became Miss Hatfield again. After her second marriage (her husband now is Albert C. Shires, of the Federal Housing Administration) she continued to use her maiden name. "It's a matter of principle," she explained.

It also was a matter of principle that prompted Lucy Stone to set her famous example. Her name was widely known for years before she met Henry Blackwell, but if she had been the most obscure of women, she would probably have felt the necessity to remain "Lucy Stone."

Husbands Often Insist on Wives Retaining Their Identity.

Consulted Salmon P. Chase.

Before she agreed to marry Henry Blackwell she consulted several eminent lawyers, among them Salmon P. Chase. All assured her there was no law requiring a wife to take her husband's name; it was only a custom. So, with her husband's full approval, she continued as "Lucy Stone," but she used "Mrs." rather than "Miss" before her name.

Among the first to congratulate her on this singular decision was Elizabeth Cady Stanton who wrote: "Nothing has been done in the woman's rights movement that has pleased me so much as your announcement of a woman's right to her name."

From Susan B. Anthony came this note: "I am more and more rejoiced that you have declared, by actual doing, that a woman has a name, and may retain it throughout her life."

The Rev. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, another devoted friend, was even more enthusiastic:

"As to your scruple about your name, dear Lucy, it woud be strange indeed if I did not respect it, when I have always wondered that women did not feel as indignant about the merging of their own individuality as I felt for them."

But the stream of congratulatory messages was nothing compared to the flood of remonstrances from persons who thought Lucy Stone had made "a grave mistake." Yet in 1921, almost three decades after Lucy Stone's death, there were enough women who had followed her example to form a "league to promote the keeping of their own names by married women." Today, the principle and practice on which the league was founded is gaining adherents in increasing numbers. Does this indicate the prefix, "Mrs." will eventually become as extinct as the Dodo?

Woman Office Job Applicants Rated as Average in Survey

WOMEN JOB HUNTERS who have the feeling they are out of work because they are "no good" should take heart from a study of office workers just completed by the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor. The study shows that jobless women seeking office employment even in the earlier years of the depression were average and representative workers.

The results of the study are published in a bulletin entitled "Women Who Work in Offices." It includes data on 5,000 employed workers and an equal number of job applicants in six cities.

No evidence that the older woman office worker was a special victim of the depression is afforded in the survey. In fact, the employed group studied showed a somewhat higher percentage of women, who were 30 and over than did the applicants. About two-thirds of each group were from 20 to 30 years of age.

The report does not give the marital status of the employed group of office workers, but shows that five-sixths of the applicants were single and only a tenth were married.

In the matter of education a rather close parallelism exists between the employed and the applicants, the vast majority, or about three-fourths, in each case having attended high school. Seven-tenths of the former as against over a half of the latter had completed the course. The applicants showed little higher proportions who had had only grammar school education and who had been to college than did the employed group.

Some commercial training at a school was reported by about nine-tenths of the women with jobs and two-fifths of those applying for work who gave information on the subject. The applicants, however, were an experienced group as over half reporting had had at least five years in office employment, only 7 per cent showing less than a year's experience.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Weaning the Baby.

A CONSIDERABLE number of "old wives' tales," superstitions, and customs surround weaning. Many of these, handed down for generations, are unhealthful and some of the foods proposed for substitution are unwholesome. Weaning is the process of transferring the baby from mother's milk to other foods that are digestible and of such quality and quantity as will continue normal growth.

Of course, the baby should not be weaned during illness, and in very warm weather any change of food must be approached with great caution. Sometimes it is necessary to wean the baby abruptly, either because of insufficient breast milk, illness on the part of the mother, or some disease of the breast.

Few mothers supply milk rich enough to nourish the child fully after the eighth month, and some of the most discouraging cases of malnutrition, rickets, anemia, etc., are found in children who have been maintained on breast milk when other foods should have been added to the diet.

If we followed the child's primitive instincts we would give him a bone to suck—one, of course, that is large enough so that it can not be swallowed. It is well known that the child's store of iron must be maintained from outside sources. Milk alone will not supply an adequate amount of iron, hence a good blood-forming food is one of the baby's first needs and meat is an excellent source.

Fat is needed and butter is the best possible form. Whole wheat bread cut into thin fingerlike strips and baked in an oven forms an excellent absorptive material for butter. Creamed soup made with spinach and potato is also recommended.

The importance of cod-liver oil and orange juice must not be forgotten and their use should be begun in small doses not later than the second month. Carrots, turnips, etc., should be cut into small cubes and thoroughly steamed for about two hours. They may then be mashed and beaten to a soft pulp. When scraped they may be given raw. If constipation is evident thoroughly cooked apple sauce unsweetened or only slightly sweetened and prune whip may be used to advantage.

Understanding View of Child Loves Urged

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

Associated Press Staff Writer.

Mary was 16 when she had her first kiss from a boy. Quite naturally, she told her mother about it, as she had told most of the events of her life. To her surprise, her mother was very much upset and expressed horror and shock at the episode. After that Mary kept such matters to herself, and in many social crises, where the mother could have helped the child, worked out her problems alone.

The mother in whom a child will confide is in an enviable position, and would do well to guard herself lest she prove unworthy of the trust. If she allows herself to be unduly shocked or to express marked displeasure and disapproval over first kisses or essays in puppy love she may find herself shut out from any further confidences where advice and help might be valuable.

When a girl or boy comes to a parent with the account of her or his first heart affairs, a new phase of the child's life has begun and the parents, whether they like it or not, must make the best of it and treat it as casually and sympathetically as possible. Parents are loath, especially with girls, to acknowledge even to themselves that the child is gone, the adult appearing. They would like to keep their children forever small and dependent, owing love and duty to themselves first.

The instinct of most fathers and mothers is to hold their children back, to keep them young and untouched, and their reaction to the outsider who encroaches on their domain is jealousy. Some day the child must break away and prefer an outsider to his parents.

Jelled Molds Made in Layers By Flotations

The Secret of Attractive Gelatin Dish? Some Fruits Sink, Others Don't.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THIS TOUCH of cool weather no doubt has awakened in every hospitable soul a desire to do some entertaining. When the sun is downcast and the breezes are cool, we forget that next week when the invited guests are to arrive the dog days may again be upon us. It is never wise, then, in the summer to plan a menu too far ahead, for what may be appropriate for today will be all wrong for tomorrow.

You can, however, always count on a light dessert, for if the day is hot a light touch at the end of the meal will be appropriate and if the weather turns cooler, and heavier dishes must be added to the menu, a light dessert still will be attractive, for it will add contrast to the rest of the meal.

Fruit always stands the test when we desire to bring an impression of freshness and coolness to our menus. Jellied desserts also add a light shimmering touch to a summer menu. A pleasing combination of fresh fruits in a tart jelly mold of contrasting color and flavor might well be your first choice when casting your eyes about for a good all around summer dessert. These jellied fruit molds look elaborate, yet are easy to make and convenient to serve.

Flotation Principle in Jellies.

Did you know that you could make a jellied fruit mold or loaf in layers simply by using one fruit that will float and another that will sink? This is the easiest way to prepare a jellied fruit mold. Here is the list of fruits that will sink in gelatin: canned apricots, canned blackberries, canned cherries (Royal Anne or maraschino cherries), canned pears, canned peaches, canned pineapple, canned raspberries, fresh grapes and cooked prunes. Now the ones that float in gelatin are diced apples, sliced bananas, sections of fresh grapefruit and oranges, sliced fresh peaches and pears, strawberries cut in halves, broken nut meats (any kind) and marshmallows.

Choose any fruit from the sinking group for the bottom layer of your gelatin mold and any floating fruit that will contrast in color and flavor with the sunken group for the top layer.

Here are two attractive fruit combinations that may be used effectively for the jellied mold made in layers. After you have tried these you can pick your favorite combinations from the fruits listed above and combine them with a gelatin of the right color and flavor.

Layered Peach and Banana Mold.

Pour dissolved lime-flavored gelatin into sherbet glasses or loaf molds, filling them two-thirds full. Add canned sliced peaches, distributing them over entire surface; then add sliced bananas in same way. Chill until firm. Unmold loaf molds; slice. Serve plain or with a sauce.

Orange and Grape Layers.

Pour dissolved orange-flavored gelatin into individual or loaf molds, or in sherbet glasses, filling them two-thirds full. Add halved and seeded green grapes, distributing them over entire surface; then add orange sections, free from membrane. Chill until firm. Unmold and slice if necessary. Serve plain, or garnish with whipped cream and shredded canned coconut.

Sculptor Has Praise For Modern Figures

The modern woman has the most beautiful figure since the days of ancient Greece and modern clothing deserves all the credit, says Ephraim Keyser, 84 years old, dean of Baltimore sculptors. The Associated Press quotes Mr. Keyser as follows:

"When women abandoned corsets and heavy underwear, when they stopped tying themselves up in bundles, they permitted their figures to develop more freely, more naturally.

Prize Awarded to N. Y. Wife For Feeding 3 on $10 a Week

HER SUCCESSFUL planning of meals for three on a $10-a-week food budget recently won first prize for Mrs. Mary Gilmer, of New York, on a contest sponsored by the health department among Harlem housewives to ascertain the most nutritious diets that could be provided on the least money. Here is how Mrs. Gilmer does it:

She serves no pastries.

Any leftover vegetables she creams and serves the next day.

Meat leftovers are served in a loaf or croquettes.

Here is one of her sample diets: Breakfast, mixed dried fruits, cooked cereal, coffee and toast, milk and brown bread for the baby; dinner, macaroni and cheese, creamed carrots, spinach, lettuce and tomato salad, bread and butter, milk and sliced peaches; lunch or supper, split-pea soup, eggs, bread and butter, tea and milk.

Mrs. Gilmer's husband makes $30 a week. He pays $30 a month rent and manages to save little. The $10-a-week budget is never exceeded.

Mrs. Frances Handy was awarded a prize for feeding a family of five on $8.20 a week. Her only income is from relief funds. Miss Elinoris Johnathan was awarded a prize for providing nourishing meals for a family of seven at $16 a week.

The housewives reported in their questionnaires that they saved one cent a bottle on milk by buying it at the grocery instead of having it delivered, that brown bread costs a little less than white, that turnip and beet tops can be cooked as greens and that macaroni and cheese, beans and egg dishes can be substituted for meat.

High Court Is Defended By Connally

Texas Senator to Oppose Any Move to Limit Tribunal's Power.

Virginia Bar Convention at White Sulphur Hears Address.

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Aug. 9.—Strong opposition to any move to limit jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in interpretation of the Constitution was expressed here tonight by Senator Tom Connally, of Texas.

"As an American citizen," he declared in an address to the Virginia State Bar Association, "I oppose divesting the Supreme Court of the power to construe and interpret the Constitution at the suit of any citizen of the Republic whenever any right guaranteed to him by that instrument may be invaded by the Congress, the Executive, the Courts, or any State of the Union."

Senator Connally's address followed one made this morning by C. O'Conor Goolrick, president of the Virginia Bar, in which he defended the policies of the present Administration and expressed the belief that no effort was being made to destroy the Constitution through recovery methods now being effected.

After going into the history of the American court system, and tracing the framing of the Constitution and its amendments, the Texas Senator said "If Congress should be alone the judge of its own power and should be free to choose the scope and breadth of its authority, the limits of Federal jurisdiction might be so extended as to build up a centralized government far beyond the dreams of the founders of the Constitution."

Unrestrained Conflict Seen.

It is not difficult to imagine, innumerable conflicts between the exercise of the respective powers of States, he declared, with Congress "unrestrained by constitutional limitations and with the States resisting its encroachments."

"With no constitutional arbiter the balances and checks of the Constitution would prove ineffective and futile. How are the 48 States to preserve their jurisdiction and maintain their soverign power unless Federal authority is limited to its proper sphere of action? How are the powers specifically denied to the States to be successfully prohibited unless there be a supreme judicial authority to nullify their pretentions?"

The speaker told the Virginia lawyers that "the same judicial power that denies to Congress extra constitutional authority must also enforce the limitations and prohibitions pertaining to the executive, when the question is properly presented to the court in a judicial proceeding."

Court Check Is Needed.

Although Congress possesses a check on the Executive through impeachment, "that is not an adequate remedy," Senator Connally said in citing the Milligan case in 1864, when a citizen was saved from execution through a Supreme Court ruling.

"There are 25 prohibitions in the Constitution against the exercise of powers by the Federal Government," the Senator said. "How are they to be effectively maintained and forced? The great document catalogues many prohibitions as to the power of the States. The power of the President of the United States is perhaps greater than that of any reigning monarch on the globe and yet there are limitations upon his authority which the court in a recent decision defined and maintained."

Modifications and changes to the Constitution may be adopted through amendment if present distribution of powers is not adequate, Senator Connally pointed out. "However," he continued, "in any such new adjustment there will always remain the necessity for a lofty, impartial and courageous tribunal to keep in check pretentions of power not authorized, and to preserve the checks and balances of the Constitution. If the existing court should be destroyed or limited, in the course of time, necessity would require the erection of another in its stead."

Amendment Favored.

The Senator expressed a belief that there is need for legislation "qualifying and limiting the authority of inferior Federal courts to employ the writ of injunction against the enforcement of State and Fedral laws prior to determination by the Supreme Court."

"Personally I favor a constitutional amendment removing from the field of temptation the allurements of political ambition," the Senator asserted. He said he believed it should be provided that no member of the Supreme Court should ever be eligible for appointment to any political or governmental office.

"The members of that high court should, like a cloistered monk, forsake the world and mammon when they assume the vows of that exalted station."

There always remains the remedy of impeachment if the court should "corruptly or wantonly or wilfully transcend its just powers," he said. "It's towering authority does not reach beyond the arm of the Constitution. It is not sacred. It is not sacrosanct. It is composed neither of gods nor demigods. But where shall we find a better or wiser or more impartial tribunal in which to test the authority of a mighty Government over a weak and humble citizen . . . Before what other bar would the American people consent to have summoned a sovereign State at the suit of another State . . . ?"

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Aug. 9.—It was learned today that an allocation of $54,980 for the construction of route 11 from Winchester north to the West Virginia line will be matched with State funds and that as a result the sum of $109,960 will be available for construction of this last unimproved gap on the historic Valley turnpike.

Stretching from the State line nine miles north of Winchester to Bristol, Va.-Tenn., this highway is the longest in the Virginia system and from this city south to beyond Staunton it has been made a three-lane boulevard.

From Winchester north to the West Virginia line the road has been narrow and hazardous although there is at no point a heavy grade. The construction is expected to afford employment to a large number of men. It will be the second major construction project in Frederick County, a convict camp being engaged in the building of route 7, the most direct route from this city to Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and Pittsburgh.

It was announced today that F. D. Henley, rights-of-way engineer, is coming to Winchester to confer with members of a local highway committee regarding rights-of-way on route 50 in Clarke County. If difficulties between the State and property holders can be adjusted it is believed the State will resume construction halted when prices awarded by a commission for certain properties were held by the State to be too high.

An inquiry was addressed to PWA officials in Washington today by city officials seeking to ascertain the status of an application for $292,000 in public works funds to be used in development of a new source of water for this city, the total estimated cost of which is $532,000.

The application was forwarded to Washington some weeks ago from Richmond, where it was approved by State PWA officials, and information received from Federal authorities was to the effect that action would doubtless be taken in the near future.

CCC Youths In Maryland Quarantined

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 9.—CCC Camp No. 858, in Allegany County, Md., has been under quarantine since last Sunday, it became known here today. Approximately 200 men are confined to the camp.

The quarantine was established after Filbert Roccisano, 26, Baltimore, was brought to the Cumberland Memorial Hospital suffering from what was first believed to be infantile paralysis.

Dr. Harvey W. Weiss, superintendent of the hospital and former city health officer, said diagnosis of the case had not been completed, and the patient had been isolated since the time of his arrival.

Capt. Albert J. McCurdy, commanding officer at the camp, refused to comment on the quarantine, referring all questions to Dr. Joseph P. Franklin, county health officer, who was in Baltimore today attending a meeting of Maryland health officers.

There are two other CCC camps in the vicinity of Camp No. 858.

Maryland '34 Toll Low.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 9.—The death rate from infantile paralysis in Maryland during 1934 was lower than from diphtheria, measles or whooping cough, figures presented by State Health Officer R. H. Riley to the county health officers of the State today showed.

The afternoon session of the quarterly meeting of the county health officials was taken up with a discussion of infantile paralysis and spinal meningitis. Public health officials from the national service from Virginia were present to discuss methods of diagnosis and treatment of paralysis.

There were .1 deaths per 100,000 population from infantile paralysis in Baltimore and .5 deaths in counties in 1934, the report showed.

Measles killed 11.6 children per 100,000 in the city and 6.4 in the counties, while whooping cough accounted for 6.8 deaths in Baltimore and 8.2 in the counties.

The report showed 287 deaths from infantile paralysis in Maryland in 1928, the last year in which an epidemic was reported. There were 44 deaths in 1933, and 27 in 1934.

Seven New Cases

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 9.—Only seven new infantile paralysis cases were reported in Virginia today, running the total since June 1 to 410, but State health officials declined to attach much significance to the smaller number recorded by physicians.

They pointed out that the daily reports fluctuated greatly, with the peak usually coming during the first of the week and sloping toward the end. They said this might be due to week-end visiting, during which people contracted the disease while in crowds. The incubation period of the malady is seven days, they pointed out, which would cause a larger number of patients to be stricken during the following week-end and reported in the next few days.

In contrast to the precautions of naval officials in keeping their men out of the State at present, authorities at the Miltary Academy have announced that 300 members of West Point's first class would arrive at Fort Monroe on Tuesday according to schedule. The plebes will receive training at the Coast Artillery at the Virginia post.

Vaccine Test Retarded

By the Associated Press.

Absence of infantile paralysis among 800 Virginia and North Carolina children chosen for a test of the new vaccine against the disease was reported yesterday by Dr. R. C. Williams, of the United States Public Health Service, to have retarded the service's efforts to test the effectiveness of it.

Dr. Williams explained that parents of 800 children volunteered to have the vaccine administered to their children. The service took every other child on the list and administered it to 400 children, and intentionally did not give it to the alternate 400 for checking purposes. Thus far, Dr. Williams said, none of the 800 has been reported with the disease.

Meanwhile the disease continued on the increase in Virginia, public health records showed, with the peak indicated by a graph to be due late in August, while in North Carolina the records indicated it was on the decline.

Plans for Fair Made.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., Aug. 9.—Returning from Richmond, where he and other officials of the Virginia State Fair Association conferred with Dr. I. C. Riggin, head of the State health department, on the infantile paralysis situation, Charles B. Ralston, State secretary and also secretary of the Staunton Fair, said the exhibition would be held Labor Day week "unless the disease breaks out seriously in this section of the State."

"If local health authorities advise us to postpone the fair, we will do that. But unless something occurs to make the fair very dangerous we will continue our plans to have the fair as usual," Mr. Ralston said.

Theater Ban Lifted.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 9.—With only one case of infantile paralysis reported in Prince William County, the Manassas Theater was reopened tonight to all persons over 16 years of age.

Sunday schools, swimming pools, and other children's gathering places will remain closed until about the first of October. The opening of the public schools in the county still is undecided. The one case in the county is in Haymarket.

Fair Abandoned

Charles Town, W. Va., Aug. 9.—Following publication last week by the Jefferson County Board of Health of a quarantine prohibiting children under 16 from attending any public gatherings it was announced yesterday that Morgan's Grove Fair, the county's only agricultural exhibition staged annually near Shepherdstown for many years, will be abandoned this year.

No cases have been reported here to date.

Probe of Arson Fails To Uncover Clews

By the Associated Press.

Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 9.—An all-day investigation of the arson attempt at Frank Roane School, here, failed to give Deputy Fire Marshal Samuel Steiner more than two or three meager clews, he announced tonight.

Aided by Detective R. H. Johnson, of the city force, the fire marshal is endeavoring to ascertain who made the unsuccessful attempt yesterday to set fire to the old school building.

The fire was discovered by a passerby and was extinguished before it had done much damage. A glass jar containing gasoline, charred bits of paper and fragments of a candle were found in the classroom where the fire was discovered.

Bus Line Plans New Service For Annapolis

Third Proposal to Replace W. B. & A. Is Presented to Utility Board.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 9.—A third proposal to furnish transportation to Annapolis in the absence of the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad facilities was made to the Public Service Commission by the Peninsula Transit Corporation, a bus line, today.

The transit corporation proposes to operate along the Defense highway, a route which will serve only a part of the area now served by the South Shore Line of the W. B. & A. Six round trips will be made per day. One-way fares between Washington and Baltimore will be $1, with round trip fares $1.50. Passengers also will be carried between intermediate points.

Two other carriers, the new Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad and the Red Star Bus Line, have asked permission to operate to Annapolis when the W. B. & A. ceases to function on August 20. The Peninsula Transit request for a franchise will be heard on August 14 by the commission, when the other two requests also will be reviewed.

$500,000 Is Split On Yacht Cruise

Maryland 'Cushion Fund' Divisions Agreed Upon.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Aug. 9.—A tentative distribution of the $500,000 "cushion fund" provided by the Legislature, among State departments was agreed upon by the board of public works during a cruise of the State yacht Dupont which ended here today.

The board was faced with requests for a share in the fund totaling $1,300,000 from the various departments. These were discussed and the tentative distribution of the $500,000, which becomes available on October 1, was made.

William H. Blakeman, State budget director, took the tentative allocations back to his Baltimore office and will put them in shape to submit to the board for final action in about two weeks. When his schedule is received the board will go over it and make any changes necessary.

Jail Inmates Top Records For Virginia

Costs Increase From $360,705 in 1934 to $410,007.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 9.—Virginia's jail population during the fiscal year ended June 30 totaled 74,599, an increase of 13,626 over the previous year, and set an all-time record for the State, a report by Arthur W. James, commissioner of public welfare, showed today.

The figures were compiled by Russell B. Devine, supervisor of jail accounts for the public welfare department. The previous record was made in 1933, when 62,842 persons were jailed.

$410,007 Costs Listed.

Jail costs during the year just ended were $410,007, as compared with $360,705 for the period ended June 30, 1934.

In the absence of a detailed analysis of jail cards recording the offenses for which arrests were made, no official explanation for the startling increase was made.

Gov. Peery, commenting on the figures, suggested that trial justices, who were operative for the first time during the past fiscal year, may have been more zealous in enforcement than the old inferior courts.

James was out of his office today, but it was recalled that he had repeatedly called attention to the fact that the State bears the major part of the cost of local jails, yet retains practically no control over their Administration, indicating that State operation of jails might prove more efficient and less costly.

Paroles Studied.

A sub-committee of the Governor's advisory board, with James as a member, is working on the problem of parole, probation and indeterminate sentences, closely linked with the jail situation. Their report is expected to be submitted to the advisory board on August 15.

Devine has applied for full-time clerical workers under the WPA program who, if the project is approved, will analyze and tabulate jail cards for the record year in an effort to ascertain the cause of the increase.

Every city in the State except Alexandria and Hopewell had more prisoners in jail than last year.

Ickes Called FiddlingNero By Mackall

His Reply to Secretary's Jibe Predicts Much Relief Confusion.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 9.—Charging that Federal officials "squabble over who is to do the Maryland work relief program while 30,000 employables remain unemployed," John N. Mackall, who resigned this week as WPA administrator for Maryland, today predicted failure for much of the program.

He made the prediction in a formal statement issued in reply to Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who charged yesterday that Mackall wanted to "run the whole show" on public works in Maryland.

Francis Dryden, who succeeded Mackall, conferred today with Baltimore officials on plans for an immediate start on the public works projects in the city. Hayor Howard W. Jackson announced, following the conference, that the city is prepared to start actual work on a number of projects within 24 hours after Washington allots funds and names the projects.

Labor Leader Anxious.

Joseph P. McCurdy, president of the Maryland-District of Columbia Federation of Labor, warned today of dissatisfaction with wage scales under the public works program. He said there "is a possibility there will be a lot of trouble."

Mackall's statement issued in reply to Ickes follows:

"Nero fiddled while Rome burned, but nobody in Maryland is interested in that. It happened 2,000 years ago. Ickes and Hopkins 'squabble' over who is to do the Maryland work relief program, while 30,000 employables remain unemployed.

"This is of interest to every man and woman in Maryland. It is, of course, of vital interest to the 30,000 and their dependents, and because of this, it is of great interest to all the people in Maryland who want to see 'this business of relief ended.'

"The public is not interested in what Ickes thinks of me, nor indeed, in what I think of Ickes. It is interested in getting the works program going, which, to date, has proceeded with singular inertia. Four months ago yesterday, the President approved the joint resolution authorizing the works program.

Ickes Taken to Task.

"Today Secretary Ickes has not put a single man to work on this program. He can give any reason he pleases for his failure to do that, but the public is not interested in his excuses. It is interested in the fact that $50,000,000 is available for Maryland and that not a single man has been put to work in more than four months since the program was authorized.

"It is purely incidental whether Ickes knows that the Baltimore program was discussed at a conference with the works progress officials, lasting many hours. Col. Hackett, his principal assistant, knows it because he attended the conference. A number of other people in Ickes' office also know it.

"There is a statement by Mr. Hopkins this morning that the 5,500,000 employables in the Nation will be given a job in the next 12 weeks. So far as Maryland is concerned, and this is the only place with which I am familiar, except for the program which has been developed by Mayor Jackson and me for Baltimore City, and except for 'boondoggling,' I predict that not 10 per cent of the employables will be put to work by November 1. This is the essential fact that interests the people. It is a fact that can be checked."

'Louis Is No Killer, I'll Show Him,' Says Baer, Ready to Train

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

EN ROUTE to Boston With the Nats.—As the Washington club fares forth on its final swing through the league, hopelessly lost in the second division, Manager Bucky Harris is looking not toward sixth place, or even fifth, in Harris' mind, the 1936 line-up of the Nats will be taking form. For it is on the Western diamonds that Harris intends to make his final appraisal of the talent he has at his command.

POVICH.

After that it will be determined by Harris and Owner Clark Griffith just what material the Nats can depend upon for 1936, who is to be traded, and how strong they can go in their obvious need for pitchers. That it will be an active winter ni the trading mart is a foregone conclusion. Every club except the Tigers will be in the market, particularly the Yanks, who are in a state of disintegration, and the White Sox, who, having tasted of the league lead, now foresee the pennant with a bit of bolstering.

This department is assuming, of course, that Harris will be offered and will accept another managerial contract with the Nats. His present pact expires at the end of the 1935 season. Griffith, as usual, is not tipping his hand in the matter, but Harris talks freely of his plans for 1936, which is fair indication that he has already arrived at an understanding with the Washington owner.

Even Harris' enemies can not hold him to account for the Nats' present poor status in the race. Before the start of the season, Griffith acknowledged that Harris was in woeful need of pitchers and declared that he would absolve him of all blame if the Nats were a failure this season. He did provide Harris with such as Bump Hadley and Buck Newsom, but Harris could not pitch for Hadley and he surely had no control over Newsom's broken knee cap.

Of the Nats' cast, only Buddy Myer and Jake Powell are fixtures in their positions next year. Both Harris and Griffith are ready to dispose of Heinie Manush and Fred Schulte at the first good offer involving pitchers. The status of every other man on the club is in doubt, including the entire pitching staff.

For Dee Miles the impending Western trip means that at Orlando next spring he already will be a permanent owner of a Washington outfield post or will still be very much on trial. Miles now represents Harris' chief rookie hope. With his iron arm, his speed on the bases and his ability to bunt stamping him a clever prospect, Harris is anxious to establish for a certainty that Miles can hit big league pitching. He is scheduled to play against both right-handers and left-handers in the West, while Harris seeks to arrive at a definite estimate.

Should Miles justify Harris' hopes, he will hasten the departure of either Manush or Schulte, or both. The Nats' manager envisions his 1936 outfield as comprising three such speedsters as Miles, Jake Powell and Bud Loane, the lad who is still down at Chattanooga. Johnny Stone would be retained for his spring hitting power and other emergencies.

Joe Kuhel will be facing his final chance to recover his form of two years ago when he was a sensation at first base. A fancy fielder from the time he broke into the big leagues and a long-distance hitter, Kuhel has not approached his peak since suffering his broken ankle early in 1934. Harris and Griffith are prone to call Kuhel's slump an "off year," but with his leg now fully recovered, Kuhel is expected to start hitting and improve in the field or else—the Nats will be looking for a first baseman.

If the Nats are to get improved catching, they must get it not from Cliff Bolton who, after six years in the league, will certainly not begin to function any better, but from the two rookies, Sammy Holbrook and Jack Redmond. And though Griffith and Harris shy at admitting it, neither is particularly pressed with the prospects of either. Of the two, Redmond appears to have more of the makings. Holbrook, a hard hitter, wins no prize as a handler of pitchers.

So unless Redmond or Holbrook, who will get plenty of chance to establish themselves on the current trip, show a marked reversal of form, Griffith will be prepared to go into the market for a catcher as well as pitchers.

The left side of the Nats' infield is still very much uncertain. The only fixture is Ossie Bluege, and he is expected to fill nothing more than a utility role in the 1936 plans. Cecil Travis will get the opportunity to make good as a third baseman or find himself transferred to the outfield, where his hitting power can be utilized. Despite denials, there is still doubt in the minds of Griffith and Harris that Travis is a good third baseman. But his hitting power makes him an acceptable one.

New hope is seen in the performance of Red Kress at shortstop. The comeback kid, now playing like he played in '28 and '29, is filling the bill to Harris' taste and more. If he is not a recurrent flash in the pan, he will be the Nats' 1936 shortstop. If he is, Griffith and Harris will know it at the end of this trip, and a shortstop will also figure in the club's trading plans.

Poor Kingfish Describes Sad Reaction to Joe Louis' Punch

By Paul Gallico,

A Special Correspondent.

EN ROUTE by Air to New York, Aug. 9.—King Levinsky's explanation and comment upon the recent debacle is worthy of being preserved in the annals of succinct speeches. When asked what happened to him in his fight with Joe Louis, he replied—"I got nailed." To this statement Lena Levinsky added two words. She said—"I'll say you got nailed."

This seemed to cover the entire situation.

The King later threw some important medical and physiological light on the sensations experienced by a gentleman who is being assaulted by Joe Louis. I inquired whether there was any pain connected with being hit on the chin by Mr. Louis, and Levinsky, after a moment of reflection, said that you don't feel nuttin' at all. You just feel mum all over. Further researches into sensations while on the floor drew out the interesting information that at that time you don't know nuttin' either. You don't feel nuttin' and you don't hear nuttin'.

I was genuinely interested in determining the sensations of a victim of Louis' sharpshooting, but I think I will wait for a keener subject. The Levinsky is a fortunate boy in that none of his sensations are particularly sharp. He remembered that while on the floor he could not hear the referee count. He said that he got up without taking the full count because he was hurt and didn't know what he was doing. I imagine that many a fighter finds himself in that spot. He cannot hear any count and has no feel for the lapse of time and so, for fear of being counted out, he crawls to his feet as quickly as he can, and then finds himself criticized for not taking the full count of nine.

Hurts Later.

However, the King did not bring this morsel out of the storehouse of his memory. He said that while it doesn't hurt when you get hit, especially if you have been hit by Louis, it hurts very much when you come

Discovery Favored Today at Saratoga

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 9.—Facing the most difficult task of his four-year-old campaign, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Discovery, winner of seven straight races, tomorrow will pick up 139 pounds and attempt to beat six lightly-weighted opponents in the 1¼ miles of the $7,500 Merchants and Citizens Handicap at Saratoga.

The holder of the world's record at the distance, as well as at 1⅛ miles, is in great form, but the weight is four pounds more than he has ever carried.

Owens Faces A.A.U. Quiz On Funds

Will Be Called Today or Tomorrow to Defend Amateur Standing.

Track Star Reputedly Received $159 in Ohio as Honorary Page.

By the Associated Press.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 9.—Lou N. Bloom, president of the Northeastern Ohio Division of the Amateur Athletic Union, said today he would summon Jesse Owens, fleet Ohio State track and field star, to appear before the division board of directors either tomorrow or Sunday to defend his amateur standing.

Owens, Bloom said, may have jeopardized his standing by accepting money from the State for work he did not perform.

Bloom made his announcement after he learned that the books of the State auditor show Owens received $159 between June 9 and July 31 as an honorary page of the Ohio House of Representatives. Just before the Legislature adjourned June 9, Owens, who had been employed as a regular page at $3 per day, was made an honorary page.

To Ask Explanation.

Bloom said the A. A. U. will ask Owens to explain why he is receiving money for work he does not perform.

Larry Snyder, Owens' coach at Ohio State, said the track star's work for the Legislature has nothing to do with athletics.

"If the Ohio Legislature or the people of Ohio want to pay Owens as an honorary page, whether he works or not, that is no concern of the A. A. U.," said Snyder.

News to Maj. Griffith.

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—Maj. John L. Griffith, Big Ten athletic commissioner, today said he understood that Jesse Owens, Ohio State track star, was working for the Ohio Legislature and not serving as an honorary page, with compensation but no work.

"It is news to me," said the commissioner, "so naturally I have no comment to make. I do not know of any Big Ten athletes who get a salary without working for it, and I do not think Owens does."

The commissioner said he would look into the situation, but made no prediction as to what action would be taken.

Greenberg's Clout Nets Tiger Margin

Chisox Are Beaten, 4-3; Rowe Wins No. 12.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Aug. 9.—Hank Greenberg smashed his thirty-first home run of the season over the scoreboard with Gehringer on base in the fifth inning today to give the Detroit Tigers their winning margin over the Chicago White Sox. The score was 4 to 3.

Schoolboy Rowe went the route as the Tigers scored their second successive victory over the Sox in the current series. Ted Lyons pitched the entire game for Chicago, and each pitcher allowed eight hits. The victory was Rowe's twelfth this year.

A gift run in the fifth preceded Greenberg's homer. Appling, who had made the first White Sox run in the first half of that inning, dropped the ball when he attempted to double Gehringer at first, White scoring

Linke Is Given Last Chance On Trip

Pitcher Must Perform or Leave, Says Harris, as Nats Go on Road.

By Shirley Povich.

EN ROUTE TO BOSTON WITH THE NATS, Aug. 9.—The Nats' last Western swing, on which they departed tonight with a three-game stopover in Boston, holds especial significance for Ed Linke, the greatest mystery of Bucky Harris' pitching staff.

Linke's status with the Nats will be definitely determined on the 19-game road trip, Bucky Harris declared last night. Keenly disappointed in the failure of the rolypoly right-hander to develop into a consistent winner, Harris will not spare him in a final effort to establish his worth to the team.

Linke will be sent to the mound every fourth day, said Harris. According to the Nats' manager, the portly pitcher has fully recovered from being struck in the head two weeks ago in New York and must now prove his case or be disregarded in the Nats' 1936 plans.

"I did not believe," said Harris, "that Linke would be an in-and-outer. At Biloxi, he looked like the team's best pitching bet, but when the season started he not only lacked a fast ball but his control was shameful. We are through trifling with him. He's going to get plenty of chance to work on this trip and if he doesn't make good then we'll know a lot more about our 1936 pitching staff.

Has One Good Game.

"If Linke takes his work seriously, I still think he'll make a big league pitcher. That one good game he pitched for us this season can't be thrown out. In that 2-1 game that he won he had everything, speed, control and a fair curve. As I said, he's going to get plenty of chance to make good and if he doesn't, it's his own fault.

Suiting his action to his words, Harris announced that Linke would pitch one of the games of the double-header with the Red Sox tomorrow. Buck Newsom will go to the mound for the Nats today in the series opener.

This last Western swing of the Nats which will carry them successively into Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis for a four-game series in each city, will go far, too, toward establishing the worth of young Dee Miles. Harris intends to use the rookie outfielder regularly in an attempt to inject more hitting power into the outfield and more speed into the club's base running.

If Miles justifies Harris' hopes, then the Nats will plan their 1936 outfield accordingly, with Heinie Manush and Fred Schulte certain to be placed in the trading market.

Pirates Trim Reds, 1-0, On Bud Hafey's Homer

Pittsburgh, Aug. 9 (AP).—Rookie Bud Hafey, who is batting at a .143 gait, lined a drive over the scoreboard today for a home run to give Pittsburgh a 1-to-0 triumph over Cincinnati.

The hit by the nephew of the once great "Chick" Hafey came in the eighth inning of a hurling duel between Bill Swift and young Albert Hollingsworth, Red southpaw. It was his second home run since he joined the Pirates about two months ago.

Crosby About Even On Races, He Says

Prefers Ready-Made Turf Stars to Yearlings.

By the Associated Press.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Bing Crosby, the deep-throated crooner, who owns a small string of thoroughbreds, says he'd "rather stick to ready-made horses" than speculate on yearlings.

The singing screen star said he had made some bids here for yearlings for a friend on the Pacific Coast, whose name he withheld, but said he, himself, did not care to dabble with what he described as "a 4-to-1 gamble."

Asked as to his luck on the races, which he attends almost daily, Crosby said, "I'm about even so far." He said his stable includes "only half a dozen cheap horses" and that his activities as an owner are "very slight."

Yankees Edge Mackmen by 3-2 Score

Ryan's Single, Homer by Rolfe, Plus Errors, Are Winning Margin.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Blondy Ryan, former Giant infielder making his debut with the Yankees, started the rally and Red Rolfe climaxed it with a home run as New York scored three runs in the third inning to defeat the Philadelphia Athletics, 3 to 2, today.

Red Ruffing held the Athletics to six hits but had to bear down in the last two innings when the A's filled the bases twice. Lou Gehrig's error let in one run in the eighth, but then Ruffing stopped Johnson and Foxx.

The Yanks could do little with Vernon Wilshere except in the third. With one out, Ryan singled. Ruffing followed with another one-bagger, which, with the help of two errors, allowed Blondy to score. Rolfe then cracked out his home run to account for what proved to be the deciding runs.

Shields, Grant Upset Foes; Gain Final

Wood, Parker Defeated in Semi-Final Round at New York.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Sidney Wood, of New York, Davis Cup alternate and top-seeded favorite, and Frank Parker, of Spring Lake, N. J., defending champion and No. 2 seeded star, both went down to defeat today in the semifinal round of the Eastern grass court tennis championships at the Westchester Country Club.

Wood was trounced by Frank Shields, husky movie star on vacation from Hollywood, 6—2, 6—2, and Parker yielded to Bryan Bitsy Grant, of Atlanta, Ga., 8—6, 6—0, 6—2. Grant and Shields will meet Sunday for the title Parker won last year by whipping George Lott in four sets.

A powerful service and surprising steadiness off the ground gave Shields his unexpectedly decisive victory over the unused Davis Cup alternate. Wood had been expected to outsteady Shields but it worked just the other way, Shields playing most of the game from the baseline and proving the steadier with both his forehand and backhand.

Is Off His Game.

Wood obviously was off his game. He missed shots that seemed comparatively easy and he lost heart as the match progressed. Shields' powerful delivery also worried the flaxen-haired Forest Hills veteran, for at no time was he able to handle it effectively.

The Parker-Grant match saw the little Southerner scoring his first victory on grass over the Spring Lake youth. He found his touch, and, with all his shots under perfect control, Parker never had a chance after the first set.

The final of the women's doubles was won by the team of Mrs. John Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Boston, Mass., when they whipped Carolyn Babcock, of Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., 6—3, 7—9, 6—2.

Whitehill, Manush and Kress To Tour Mexico After Series

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Earl Mack, oldest son of the veteran Connie Mack and coach of the Philadelphia Athletics, will take a team of American League baseball players to Mexico for a month's exhibition tour after the World Series, he announced today.

The squad, which already includes 11 players, will play 11 games in Mexico City, and two each in Monterey and Laredo.

Mack said he has signed up Pitchers Earl Whitehill, of Washington; Ted Lyons, of the White Sox, and Rube Walberg, of the Red Sox. He is hopeful of adding Lefty Gomez, of the Yankees, but it is understood Yankee players will not engage in foreign barnstorming next winter.

Luke Sewell, of the White Sox, will do the backstopping, with the rest of the team lining up as follows: First base, Hank Greenberg, Tigers; second base, Charley Gehringer, Tigers; shortstop, Eric McNair, Athletics; third base, Pinky Higgins, Athletics; left field, Heinie Manush, Washington; center field, Roger Cramer, Athletics, and right field, Ralph Kress, Washington.

Germans Certain To Keep Jews Off Team, Is Forecast

By the United Press.

BUDAPEST, Aug. 9.—Certainty that German Jews will not be allowed to participate in the world Olympic games at Berlin next year was forecast tonight.

Germany brought more than 200 men and women to participate in the sixth international university games starting here tomorrow.

There were no Jews on the team.

"Jews were not sufficiently good athletes to qualify," George Fischer, manager of the German team, told the United Press.

"There are no Jews on Germany's team of more than 200 men and women because non-Aryans in Germany do not possess the Aryan competitive spirit.

"In the trials they did not show themselves as good or better than those selected to represent us here."

Cards Climb In Race; Nip Cubs, 3-1

Medwick's 16th Homer Is One of Nine Blows Off Warneke.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—The St. Louis Cardinals rode into second place in the National League today, displacing the Cubs, when the Cards walloped the Chicagoans, 3 to 1, behind the six-hit pitching of Paul Dean.

A ladies' day crowd of 30,548 saw the Cards time their nine-hit attack on Lonnie Warneke. Joe Medwick his his sixteenth homer of the season.

On a games won and lost basis, however, the Cubs tonight remained closest to the Giants, Having four more victories and three more defeats than the champions, the Cubs are now three games behind the Giants, while the Cardinals, although ahead in the percentages by 3 points, .614 to .611, still are 3½ games behind the leaders.

Wins Thirteenth Victory.

Paul Dean pitched practically perfect ball the last 5 2-3 innings, to hang up his season's thirteenth victory, as against 9 defeats. His teammates tied up an early 1-to-0 Cub lead for him in the fourth when Jim Collins walked and singles by Delancey and Gelbert sent him home. Medwick's homer at the start of the sixth put the Cardinals ahead and Orsatti's single and Rothrock's double in the seventh provided the "plush run."

Rivals Just Got Scared, He Adds

Bad Hands Were Not Full Reason for Loss, He Declares.

By Jack Cuddy,

United Press Staff Writer.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Aug. 9.—Maxie Baer, erstwhile Lochinvar of Larrup, will become an old-fashioned, stubble-faced, briny-handed "killer" for his fight next month with Joe Louis, the former champ announced today, as he prepared to shift his training quarters to Speculator, N. Y.

"They call that black boy, Louis, a killer because he stopped a few fourth-rate fighters," scoffed the California Adonis as he sat in black bathing trunks on the veranda of the big white dwelling which housed him and his entourage since before the disastrous battle with James J. Braddock.

"But wait until I step into the ring against Louis after training in the mountains at Speculator. The world will know who the killer really is—palsy walsy. Look back over our records if you want to see who is the hardest puncher. Did Louis ever put away any one worth while for the full count? No. Referees stopped most of them when his opponents got scared. But most of the guys I hit had to be dragged to their corners and worked over."

Taught Them Lesson.

The Braddock fiasco taught Baer and his handlers a costly lesson. He wasn't conditioned properly for the bout. The swanky resort region, with its army of thrill-seeking dolls and back-whacking good fellows, is not the right spot for Madcap Maxie to train, according to his manager, Ancil Hoffman, and trainer, Frank Paccassi.

So it's up into the mountains for Maxie—away from beach beauties, dancing, highballs and admiring throngs. Maxie and his outfit will shift to Speculator, where Gene Tunney trained, tomorrow or Sunday, and for three weeks he will go through gruelling conditioning—road work, wood chopping, digging, bag punching, etc. Then he will start boxing. He will soak his hands for hours in the same kind of brine Jack Dempsey used, and he will let his whiskers grow. He will become a man's fighter instead of the answer to a maiden's prayer.

Wife Will Go Along.

Yes—Mrs. Maxie Baer will go to the mountains also. The former Mary Ellen Sullivan, of Washingtn, an attractive girl in a white sport dress, explained that she would stay at Speculator until about a month before the fight. Then she will go to Ithaca, N. Y., and visit with her parents until the night of the

2 Cash $788 Charles Town Double as Mayetta, Warned Off Win

3,500 Watch Long Shots Triumph

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Aug. 9. Two bashful race fans who refused to give their names, acquired small fortunes this afternoon by being fortunate enough to pay $2 for a little colored paste board with the number 7 and 1 printed thereon. Those numbers represented Mayetta and Warned Off and those horses proved the daily double combination and the pay-off was $788.40.

After Mayetta, a $15.20 shot in her own right, won the first race, heavy money was displayed on the daily double possibility board. Two horses in the important third race, King Rock and June Time, did not have a combination ticket, while the others ranged from $71 to $1,500.

Warned Off, trained by Don Yates, proved the day's biggest surprise. The son of Happy Go was given an excellent ride by Jockey F. Smock and paid an individual mutuel of $45.20.

Long Shots Have Day.

It was "long-shot day" here in the mountains and some 3,500 participated in the sport. The program was conducted over a track that was heavy in spots and the times for the races were ordinary.

Favorite players got a breathing spell in the third race when Fairio took the measure of Lady Nymph in a thrilling stretch drive. Little Frankie Cusimano, of Washington, rode the winner, which paid $5.20.

After Arctic Land won the fourth at $18.80, the veteran Soupcon won the fifth and feature race from Dutiful by a nose margin to pay $9.80.

Never Idol Wins.

Never Idol took the sixth at $7, and the final went to Doubtless, which paid $10.40.

The stewards announced the suspension of Jockeys Wisner, Cooper, Bastone and Garrett. Wisner's case was referred to the racing commission. He and Garrett were charged with rough riding and the others with disobedience at the gate.

Southwest Midgets Win.

Behind air-tight pitching by Dochard the Southwest A. C. Midgets upset the No. 4 Police Boys Club team, 3 to 1, yesterday on Hoover Playground. Fuggett, Riley and Slattery led the winner's attack.

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al:

Suffolk Downs Race Track, Aug. 9.

Tomorrow is get-away day at Boston's new race track and ends a most successful meeting. They were wheeling in cold hot dogs by the truck load as the crowd left the park this evening in anticipation of a record crowd. The unofficial estimate last Saturday was placed at 60,000, and those in charge expect an even larger gathering tomorrow. This track and Charles Town have something in common. Both infields are virtual no-man's lands. However, this track will have the landscaping ready by next summer, and someone has said that it will "outclass Hialeah." To this I must disagree, for I believe only tropical Florida can be the setting for such a gorgeous infield. We had three winners again today—three favorites. They were Lost Love, Genial Edna and Remus. I want to thank one of my dear readers for the poem entitled "Why Didn't You Stay on Vacation?" Sorry that space does not permit my reprinting it here.

BILL.

Firse race—Traprock, a recent winner, moves up a peg and is likely to show the improvement necessary to defeat these. Lady Carrott will draw a lot of play and is dangerous. Cash Book for the show award.

Second race—High Hand II seems to be well placed in this company and I expect Hanford to ride him home in front of the pack. Chain is a contender and would improve should the track be off. Currants goes back to the sprints and has an outside chance.

Third race—Appomatox, Hidden Lore and Bright Bird are three fit horses at home at this mile-and-a-sixteenth, I prefer them in the order named, but it is a tough race.

Fourth race—Glendye might succeed in this kind of company. Gets a fair rider in Decamillas and I'm going to string along. Solitary and Little Honey to take care of the others.

Fifth race—Red Ensign will have the capable J.Mauro in the saddle and he should step away with this heat. Gov. Scholtz and Hardware will be ready to battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Eighth race—Boocap is in excellent shape now and makes his way in this kind of company. High Flag and Jack Chevigny for the other money positions.

Row Settled, Mrs. Walper Trims Mrs. Wilkerson for Title

Mrs. Powell Is Adamant, Defaults

Final 5-and-3 Match Is Dull; Winner Gets Early Lead.

ALL was peaceful and quiet on the Rock Creek golf front yesterday as Mrs. Leo Walper, of Kenwood, medalist, defeated Mrs. Hope Wilkerson, veteran golfer, 5 and 3, to win the District Women's Public Links championship.

Mrs. Walper, storm center in an unprecedented tournament row with Mrs. J. T. Powell, of Manor, was declared the victor over Mrs. Powell by default early in the morning when Mrs. Powell refused to go through with the semifinals match which Ed Burns, Rock Creek course manager, had ordered played.

With a crowd of curious spectators assembled around the first tee, Burns declared:

"Ladies, this maich is going to be settled on the golf course and not on a technicality."

Several Protests.

After several protests from well-known women golfers of the District, whose sympathy apparently was with Mrs. Powell, Manager Burns walked over to Mrs. Powell, seated near her daughter, and said:

"Mrs. Powell, are you ready to go through with your match. If you aren't, I shall be forced to default it to Mrs. Walper."

The stolid Mrs. Powell, declaring she was the rightful owner of the semifinals match because Mrs. Walper failed to show up Thursday morning, the specified time, answered:

"I have already won the match, Mr. Burns. I am ready to meet Mrs. Wilkerson in the finals."

Is Ruled Winner.

"Then," said Burns, "Mrs. Walper is the winner."

With that Mrs. Powell smiled, called over her caddy and left the course.

Shortly before 9 o'clock, Mrs. Walper and Mrs. Powell showed up, Mrs. Powell with "no intentions of playing her." They brushed by one another near the first tee, and Mrs. Powell said:

"Good morning, Mrs. Walper."

And Mrs. Walper replied:

"Good morning to you, Mrs. Powell."

Only Exchange.

And that was all in the exchange of words. For the next half an hour, until Mrs. Walper and Mrs. Wilkerson started play, the two storm centers stood as far apart from one another as the two poles.

The Walper-Wilkerson match was dull and listless, as Mrs. Walper took a 3-up lead at the turn, going out in 46, the same as Mrs. Wilkerson.

Cruickshank Favored in Va. Open

Defending ChampMenaced by Isaacs, Loving, Harper, However.

By the Associated Press.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Aug. 9. The Old Dominion golf course stretched itself to its full 6,063 yards tonight and dared the field to come out and whip its par 70 in the State Open Championship which starts tomorrow.

Bobby Cruickshank, the defending champion, predicted that a medal score of 280—even par—or possibly 278 for the 72 holes will be needed to take the crown from him, but practice round scores were soaring above regulation figures.

In the camp which is expected to number about 100 when play starts are Jack Isaacs, home course pro; Benny Loving, of Charlottesville, and Chandler Harper, of Norfolk, the three contenders whose shots the champion most fears.

Riegel Handicapped.

Bobby Riegel, who won the Southern amateur crown with a magnificent exhibition of golf, may score well, but most critics regarded his match game better than his medal play. Morton McCarthy, the Norfolk bomber who won the Middle Atlantic title, was considered another possible amateur threat, and Al Dollins, of Covington, also had his backers.

Cruickshank and his self-picked trio—Harper, Loving and Isaacs—loomed, however, as the three best bets in the struggle to end Bobby's two-year supremacy.

Harper, phlegmatic, a serious student of the game, has taken considerable punishment since he gave up his place at the head of the State's amateur parade for a place in the rear ranks of the professionals. He knows the Newport News course and, if on his game, may make the best of them step aside.

Home Course a Help.

Isaacs, usually one of the leading money winners in the Open, has never been able to match Cruickshank's pace, but on his home course he may do what the Newport News folk are pulling for him to do. He carded a 69 the other day, but most of his practice rounds have been disappointing.

Loving, who, like Cruickshank, combines a fine game with the ability to teach it, in past years has been side by side with Isaacs in the losing effort to overhaul the Richmond wizard.

Again it will be Cruickshank against the field. The canny Scot, what said that ten or more of the entries are capable of breaking par, reiterated his belief that putting will win the tournament.

Barytone Wins In Maryland Regatta

John Charles Thomas Take First Speedboat Event He Ever Entered.

By the Associated Press.

ST. MICHAELS, Md., Aug. 9.—John Charles Thomas, whose barytone voice brought him Nation-wide acclaim as an opera singer, appeared in a new role today—that of speedboat king—and won the first race he ever entered.

Thomas, a native Marylander, drove his new boat Myne to a smashing victory in the E and F runabout event as the Miles River Yacht Club regatta opened. He was opposed by the largest field of the day in winning the heat.

Bill Bigelow, St. Michaels, finished second to Rutherford in each heat, with Jack Marston, Severna Park, Md., third. Bigelow was driving Palm Beach Days and Marston piloted Howdy II.

Kingfish Describes Joe Louis' Punch

out of it. In other words, when the anaesthetic wears off and you come to, or get up, or wake up in the dressing room, or, to use his own expression, when the numbness wears off, you then hurt. You hurt especially in the stummick. Louis hit Levinsky in the stummick, one of the meanest, hardest, cleanest punches I have ever seen sent to the midriff. I know that he will be interested in knowing that it registered.

La Belle Lena showed up for the broadcast the night after the fight in a Paris hat and with her company manners. There was to be no nonsense over the air, no monkey business and no joking. That was to be understood. Because, she announced, the King was shortly going to make a comeback, the third series, I believe. The King was a little worried because he had got himself into fine condition for this fight and didn't know what to do with it. It had availed him nothing against Louis, because the colored man didn't hit him in the condition, but on the chin. But there is the King now, left with a hat full of condition, weighing 198 pounds, lean and strong, and nothing to do with it. And so he will make a comeback.

The ego of Leaping Lena is rather startling. She looks blonde and placid and even-tempered, and one would never suspect that here was the lady who once caused a sailor's parrot to drop dead from sheer envy at the color and variety of her language. Or that this is the same party who used to charge up to the ring, screaming for her brother and at his opponent. She has toned down considerably, they tell me, but even so, the Illinois commission won't permit her closer than 350 yards from the ring. She said sadly yesterday that she was no longer handling her brother's business — hadn't been for the last year. A Mr. Steinman does all that. He seems to do it very well.

Both Uneducated.

The King is a very funny man, and he says some very funny things, but it seems cruel to laugh at him, and when you are with him you don't. Only at a distance does one get the true comic flavor of his language mangling. When you are with him, you feel more that here is another victim of exploitation, and that you want to protect him. The truth is that the poor King did not have many advantages when he was a child, and he looks at this astonishing world with the mind and eyes of one who is very young. Either nobody bothered to educate him, or they couldn't catch him when the school bell rang. He was pathetic in his satisfaction that Joe Louis wasn't very bright either.

And so endeth this chapter. Two boys meet and fight, one white, the other colored. Neither of them can read or write. They hammer at one another for 2 minutes and 21 seconds, and the comedy is done. One receives $40,000, the other over $30,000. The chislers and harpies close in to take it away from them. The globe keeps on spinning.

Four Pony Events.

The program is to open at 10 o'clock with four pony events making up the morning program. Saddle and jumping classes have been arranged for ponies not exceeding 12.2 hands and similar tests are listed for ponies over 12.2 hands and not exceeding 14.2 hands.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

HARRISONBURG, Va., Aug. 9.—The Albemarle Weavers, a Charlottesville industrial club, tonight accepted the Valley League franchise vacated by the Heurich Brewers of Washington and will play at Waynesboro Saturday and Front Royal Sunday.

This gives Charlottesville two entries in the circuit. The Weavers have done well in independent circles and are expected to give a good account of themselves in the 13 remaining games to be played. Like the Brewers, the Weavers will play all their games away from home.

Heurich agreed to stay in the league if all games could be arranged for Saturday and Sunday, but this could not be done.

Two Forfeit.

Heurich, playing all of its games away from home, found the traveling expense too great, according to the letter of withdrawal submitted to President Holtzman. Orange and Charlottesville were awarded forfeits as a result of Heurich failing to appear for scheduled games this week and not notifying the home club in sufficient time.

The directors voted to allow Haden Glover, all-around player and hard hitter, to play with Waynesboro after Staunton withdrew its objection. Glover played with Staunton until he obtained a job in an industrial plant at Waynesboro. When it was developed that the position was not the result of his baseball ability, the Staunton club recommended that he be allowed to play with Waynesboro.

The former schedule will be played out this week with Staunton at Harrisonburg Sunday night, and Harrisonburg at Culpeper, Charlottesville at Orange and Staunton at Waynesboro Sunday.

Dodgers Rally in 9th To Defeat Braves, 6-5

The Dodgers led until the eighth, but then Johnny Babich weakened and was driven from the box as the braves counted three times and then added another in the ninth at the expense of Bobby Reis, the converted infielder, who received credit for his first mound victory.

"Out Fishin'"

By Jack Hawley.

Bulletin.

Trolling for bluefish late yesterday afternoon netted tremendous catches for all boats. The fish ranged from 4 to 7 pounds. Those who can secure chum can double their catches. This is the season's largest run of bluefish in the Northwest and Southwest Middles. Capt. Taft Tippett, of Ridge, Md. (phone Great Mills 6-F-12), made the report. All his boats are reserved for today and tomorrow.

LAST evening the writer checked (through many boatmen on the Chesapeake and its tidal waters) the possibility of anglers enjoying some good fishing through Saturday and Sunday. The consensus of the boatmen's opinions simmer down to but one thing—good weather will permit good fishing and after this week of northeast winds and mediocre fishing the outlook is very good, with slightly overcast skies and moderate winds.

Boatmen usually say that when a northeast wind has blown for three days one may expect clear weather for several days afterward.

The following places reported good fishing during the past week:

Solomons Island, Herring Bay, Broome Island, Point Lookout, Kenwood Beach (good fishing at the Gooses, but many complaints coming from this place due to "canceling reservations and disappointing anglers after their arrival at Kenwood." Advise this column if such poor methods are used on your party), Messick, Va.; Westland, Va.; Quinby, Va., and Colonial Beach. Wachepreague is leading the week for number and species caught and with smooth water the channel bass fishing should be very good.

Anglers who desire to try their luck on some back-breaking, wrist-twisting action should try out the lower Rappahannock for the black bonito. This fish has everything the sporting angler desires in the way of fast getaway when hooked. He breaks water with wonderful jumps in his effort to throw the hook and his trickery is most amazing. About a week ago Capt. Floyd Rollins, of Messick, harpooned a bonito just at the time the angler thought he had conquered his prize only to have the fish deliberately turn into high gear and carry harpoon and nearly Rollins with him.

Your correspondent will try his luck Saturday and Sunday for the black bonito and if successful will advise his readers in detail as to the number of boats available, phone numbers, accommodations for overnight parties and costs, and how to reach them by the shortest routes.

When friend husband returns home Sunday evening from his fishing trip try this method of preparing the fish for the table instead of the usual frying pan and see the difference both in flavor and quality: Light up the broiling oven and allow it to become very warm, but not hot. With a sharp knife slice the fish down the backbone (keeping the knife close to the bone) from head to tail (with small fish split open through the center and lay flat), lay fillet on the broiler, either wire or pan type, and season with salt and pepper, squeeze the juice of one lemon on freely, cover with slices of bacon, thin slices of tomato and onion and place under and close to broiling fire. Do not attempt to turn the fish but allow it to cook through. The skin side of the fish, being down, is easily separated from the meat, but it is preferable to serve without removing. A few minutes before removing the broiler place several small pieces of butter on and around the fish.

Kiss has reported to Manager Art Shires at Harrisburg, and Warrenfeltz's contract stipulates he must report next spring.

Old Blue Ridge Loop May Be Revived

Special Dispatch to The Post.

HARRISONBURG, Va., Aug. 9. Hack Wilson, former home run king of the National League, has high hopes of reviving the Blue Ridge League (Class D) next season and manage his home town Martinsburg club.

Wilson so declared here tonight when he came with the Shenandoah County League All-Stars to play the Harrisonburg Valley Leaguers. Rain prevented the game and Wilson and the picked league team will return here on August 22.

Hack said he was confident that Martinsburg, Hagerstown, Frederick and Chambersburg, Pa., are sufficiently interested to revive the Blue Ridge circuit, which for years was rated as the fastest Class D circuit in the country. He said he is going to work all fall and winter on the proposition and may be able to interest Winchester and another city to make a six-club circuit. Wilson indicated that the clubs would serve as farms for the big leagues.

Wilson is very cool toward night baseball but he would not be surprised if a number of the big league clubs follow the example of Cincinnati and install lights for next season. He said the lights are fine from the financial standpoint but that the players cannot work up the same energy they do in daytime. No night ball so far is contemplated in the projected Blue Ridge League.

Staunton, in Basement, Beats Waynesboro, 6-3

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Staunton, Va., Aug. 9.—Staunton defeated Waynesboro here this afternoon, 6 to 3, but it will take more victories than one to bring the locals out of the cellar position in the Valley League. Howie was effective for Staunton, keeping Waynesboro's nine hits well scattered, except in the third, when the visitors did all their scoring. Bear was retired in the sixth when Staunton put across its final two runs.

Smaller Crop Estimated by Wheat Report

Decrease of 123,367,000 Bushels on August 1; Corn Yield Higher.

By the Associated Press.

Reporting "radical changes" in crop conditions during the last 30 days, the Agriculture Department yesterday estimated that since July 1 the corn crop had increased by 228,000,000 bushels, while wheat decreased 124,000,000.

The August 1 crop estimate placed the total 1935 wheat crop at 607,678,000 bushels, compared with 731,000,000 bushels forecast July 1. George E. Farrell, director of the AAA division of grains, said "There is still plenty of wheat."

Farrell said the reduction in the wheat crop would have no effect on the 15 per cent acreage reduction to be required next year. Neither, he said, will the report affect the new four-year wheat adjustment contracts.

Black rust, hot weather and drought were named responsible for the reduction of 97,031,000 bushels in the spring wheat crop.

Failure Follows Promise.

On July 1, the department forecast a spring wheat crop of 273,000,000 bushels, but said that some fields that "looked promising" in June are now a complete failure.

Winter wheat was said to be threshing out "substantially below earlier expectations." The estimate was for 431,709,000 bushels, compared with 458,000,000 on July 1.

"Corn, which was so late that farmers were afraid it might be caught by an early frost, grew vigorously during July and is now expected to produce a yield nearly equal to the average during the last ten years," the department said.

The corn estimate today was 2,272,147,000 bushels compared with the July 1 estimate of 2,045,000,000 bushels.

The wheat carryover at present was said to be about 165,000,000 bushels and domestic consumption about 625,000,000 bushels annually.

Estimates for other crops, the department said, show less important changes, although with favorable growing weather over the larger part of the country the estimates for potatoes, sweet potatoes, sugar beets, tobacco, beans, rice, hay crops, pears and grapes all have increased from 1 to 6 per cent.

Pact Sends Texas Cotton to Market

By the United Press.

Houston, Tex., Aug. 9.—An agreement for immediate movement of the 1935 Texas cotton crop to market was reached today by attorneys for opposing factions whose legal maneuvers have resulted in a complete tieup of the crop.

Efforts of the Texas Cotton Ginners' Association to avoid regulations of the Bankhead cotton control act precipitated the stalemate, which resulted from the refusal of Federal Government officials to issue bale tags.

The agreement was announced by U. S. District Attorney Douglas W. McGregor, member of a committee appointed by Federal Judge T. M. Kennerly and charged with breaking the log-jam on cotton. Kennerly will have to approve the agreement. Its terms were not made public.

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

Stocks Advance 1 to 3 Points in 2,000,000-Share Trading Session—Wheat and Cotton Hold Steady.

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Aug. 9.—In the first 2,000,000-share session since May 28 the stock market found new vigor and moved to a new high price level. Leaders advanced 1 to 3 points. High-grade bonds were no better than steady, but others were firm. Foreign exchanges were virtually motionless. Commodities were narrow. Wheat prices at Chicago closed at the previous day's levels.

Strength in stocks was well distributed, but the leaders were the old favorites—General Motors, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward and Sears-Roebuck. Public utilities were higher. American Telephone rose to a new high price with a gain of more than 2 points. Sharp gains were scored by Foreign Power, American Power, Electric Power and Standard Gas.

Mail orders climbed 1 to 3 points. Sears-Roebuck reached the best price in four years and Montgomery Ward sold into the highest ground touched in five years. Chrysler was shoved up 3 points to the best price seen for the stock since 1929. General Motors counted 2 more points, for the best quotation in four years. Mack Trucks was lower.

Department store stocks also were buoyant. Macy continued into new high ground. Gimbel preferred moved forward 7 points. McLellan preferred bobbed up 6½ points. Steels, chemicals and motor accessories sold at 1 to 2 points higher. Fractional gains were the best the foods, coppers, oils, rubbers and amusements could do.

Rail Shares Revive.

Railroad stocks had a good revival. Union Pacific was a feature. Santa Fe, Central, Great Northern and Delaware & Hudson moved up 1 to 2 points. Airplane stocks held their strength and activity. Baldwin Locomotive common lost a point, but the preferred rose 4 points. Hide & Leather common weakened, while the preferred hardened. Liquors were better and gold shares lost ground.

Money markets were easier in tone, but the rate pegs were not lowered. Treasury operations of the week were the principal reason for an increase in excess reserves. Commercial borrowing hasn't yet shown much seasonal desire to expand, but a beginning was made this week in a stock market ban.

It goes without saying that soon or late the public will notice a bull movement in stocks and will be drawn into it in a large way. When it comes it will find an abundance of cheap money and virtually all the old facilities for speculation. This week a rise of $10,000,000 in brokers' loans was reported, but until now at least the backbone of the rise has been investment buying. Should a period of rising loans follow, the signal would be plain.

Trade news at the week-end was not important in any one item, but the cumulative effect of the numerous signs of improvement was considerable. Heads of large corporations speak from day to day of their belief in further recovery, dividends are being lifted or resumed, and the strength of the market itself is doing something to relieve anxiety and to create confidence.

Looking Backward.

Looking at the current rate of business and the progress made, which shows what the country has been able to accomplish in spite of the heavy drawbacks of the New Deal experiments, the main cause for depression of spirit clearly is realization that we would have been many a mile further along the road to prosperity had the way been cleared by sound economic policy instead of cluttered up with the debris of the brain trusters. As improvement goes on that will pass, unless the final blow is delivered by the left, in the way of badly conceived taxation, unwise fiscal legislation and a general policy of making poverty universal under an effort to reduce the circumstances of those who have property.

Meanwhile, reminders continue to pop up to show that the raucus fiddling of the NRA-AAA era (not yet closed, unhappily) is a long way from being paid for. Much furor was made recently all over the country over a matter of public utility holding companies, and because of it Congress screwed up enough courage to oppose the presidential wishes. Bad as that bit of legislation was, as originally drawn, its effect on the country scarcely could equal that of the food scarcity now experienced and in prospect because of the idiotic performance of the AAA.

It was not necessary to give farmers relief and to buy them off in the manner selected. There were many ways of siphoning money out of the Treasury into the pockets of farmers without requiring the farmer to kill off enormous numbers of his livestock and cut down his cultivation of foodstuffs. Actually the country has plenty of food, and what it can't produce it can import, as it has been doing for a year or more, but to those with a narrow margin of living, the rise in hog prices, for example, means the difference between having and going without.

Wide Crop Ruin Advances Wheat

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—Broadening of speculative demand that lifted wheat prices briskly at the last today accompanied issuance of a notable summary of current world-wide new crop destruction.

Circumstances governing world wheat supplies, the summary said, have changed quickly and completely during the past 90 days. It was asserted overproduction and burdensome immobile supplies have faded out of the picture, and the problem of possible insufficiency to meet requirements has appeared.

Rising more than a cent a bushel, wheat closed firm, ⅜ to ⅞ above yesterday's finish, September 90⅝@90¾, corn ⅜ to 1 cent up, September 76⅛@76¼, oats at ⅛ decline to an equal advance, and provisions varying from 15 cents setback to a gain of 5 cents.

Retail Gains Rise to 40% Over Last Year

Dun & Bradstreet Survey Notes Exceptional Summer Upturn.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 9.—A consolidation of recovery gains was noted today by Dun & Bradstreet in the weekly review of trade.

"Recovery took a firmer grip on most divisions of trade during the week, with the unusual midsummer upturn expected to gain momentum until reinforced by the normal fall rise," it was stated.

"As retailers' stocks in most parts of the country have been depleted, buyers thronged wholesale markets in the largest numbers recorded at some centers in more than five years for the season.

"More comfortable temperatures resulted in wider increases being set down for retail sales, as industrial operations broadened and farmers' buying power expanded."

The gain for the country over 1934 was estimated at 12 to 40 per cent in the retail field.

"As cooler weather permitted many buyers to make trips to the markets which were postponed in July, the number of visitors at some of the leading centers reached the highest total recorded for the period in four or five years," the review said.

"Where trade shows and merchants' conventions were in session, registrations established new peaks.

"Encouraged by the practical depletion of inventories of summer merchandise and cheered by the improvement in the outlook during the past month, commitments for fall exceed those of a year ago by 15 to 20 per cent."

In the manufacturing end of business, it was stated, "most industrial divisions extended previous gains during the week, the rise in steel production and the higher schedules adopted by manufacturers of farm equipment, hardware, paints, and some of the textile branches offsetting the temporary slackening in the automotive industries."

Senate's Group To Act Tuesday On Leave Bills

Civil Service Committee Reports Measure to Widen Retirement.

The Senate Civil Service Committee will meet Tuesday morning to act on the House bills restoring the 30-day vacation and setting up a 15-day sick leave for Government employes, Chairman Bulow announced yesterday.

As no serious opposition is expected, Senator Bulow predicted that the bills will be reported favorably and that they will be passed at the first opportunity by the Senate.

Sponsors of the legislation predict that they will be signed by President Roosevelt.

The Senate Civil Service Committee yesterday reported favorably several minor bills affecting Government employes.

One of these extends to legislative employes the benefits of the retirement act. Another provides that charwomen shall be paid on holidays as are annual employes.

Another bill seeks to adjust the wages and hours of 300 workers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who were discriminated against by previous legislation.

A fourth measure tightens the residential requirement on applications for Government jobs. It provides that the year's residence be certified by a county or State official.

FIFTH largest stream on the North American continent, the Yukon River is exceeded in the amount of water it carries by only four rivers in the world—the St. Lawrence, Missouri, Mississippi and Amazon.

The Yukon, strange as it seems, rises within 15 miles of the Pacific Ocean, flows 2,300 miles in a great irregular arc, then empties into the same ocean within sight of which its headwaters are located. The stream begins near the tidal waters of Dyea inlet, a tiny stream flowing from the crest of Dyea Pass. Fifteen miles farther on is Lake Bennet from which point onward the waters are navigable.

The river flows in a general northwesterly direction for 1,000 miles through Yukon Territory in Canada and on into Alaska, just crossing the Arctic Circle. Then it bends back to the south and flows in a southwesterly direction through the center of Alaska, finally emptying into the Bering Sea, which is a part of the Pacific Ocean.

One of the strangest things about the Yukon River is the fact that it is navigable for all but 15 miles of its 2,300-mile course. Through the Yukon flats, where the river makes its southward bend, it varies in width from 10 to nearly 20 miles. The upper Yukon flows through a valley 1 to 3 miles wide. Below the flats is the Rampart region, and the last 800 miles toward the sea is known as the Lower Yukon.

Move Planned For Exempting D.C. Contracts

King's Motion Will Ask Elimination From Walsh Purchases Bill.

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, yesterday told the Senate that at the appropriate time he would make a motion to eliminate the District of Columbia from the agencies affected by the Walsh bill governing purchases of supplies and the making of contracts.

Shortly after the bill was brought up for debate, Senator King said he saw no reason why the District government should be treated differently from the State governments.

As the measure now stands, the District government, along with all Federal departments and agencies, would be restricted in its dealing to those business houses which observe the wage and hour provisions of the now defunct NRA codes.

The restriction would govern all purchases of supplies and all construction contracts into which the District enters.

Under present law the District is required to buy from and award contracts to the lowest bidder.

Senator King insisted that there is no more reason to make the District government subject to the bill than to restrict the State governments.

In reply, Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, pointed out that the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage law was made applicable to the District.

Slum Project's Fate in Hands Of Justice Letts

Fate of the District's southwest slum clearance project rested in the hands of Justice F. Dickinson Letts, of the District Supreme Court yesterday after the completion of arguments of property owners who oppose the project and attorneys representing the Public Works Administration.

For the Public Works Administration, Henry H. Glassie, a special assistant to the Attorney General, contended the Government was well within its powers when it sought to condemn a large tract of southwest property to erect a model low-cost housing project.

Eleven opponents of the condemnation plan base their protests on the fact that the condemnations are not for "public use," a plea that recently resulted in the abandonment of a slum clearance project in Kentucky. All of the 11 own property within the confines of the "Army War College" project, which is expected to cost the Government about $3,500,000.

Annapolis Acts To Give Control To Milk Board

Distributors See Miller at Baltimore; Dairies Also Want Help.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 9.—Milk distributors in the Annapolis milkshed, as well as producers in the Eastern Shore section of the Philadelphia shed have approached the Maryland Milk Control Commission relative to having the commission take control of their territories, C. Wilson Miller, chairman of the commission, said today.

Miller also said that at a conference in his office, the Baltimore dairies had agreed to co-operate fully with the commission. All the dairies except one were represented at the meeting. The commission took over the regulation of the milk traffic in the Baltimore area several days ago.

The tax of 1-96 of a cent per quart, which was to have been collected on the July shipment of milk in the Baltimore shed, will not be imposed on last month's shipments, but milk produced during August will be taxed. The change in the date of starting collections was made because of the difficulty of collecting from farmers who already have been paid.

Miller said that he would confer with the Annapolis distributors next week in regard to taking jurisdiction over their area. No date has been set for the meeting with the Eastern Shore producers.

Hagerstown Council Asks Tracks Removal

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 9.—Hagerstown may soon be rid of trolley tracks in its business section. In considering the rebuilding of Route 40 through the city, the mayor and council will ask the Potomac Edison Co. to establish a terminal other than in the public square, thereby enabling the city to remove the tracks if the present Route 40 is retained. Already tracks have been abandoned on all but one block of the present Route 40, as well as on another main highway to the north.

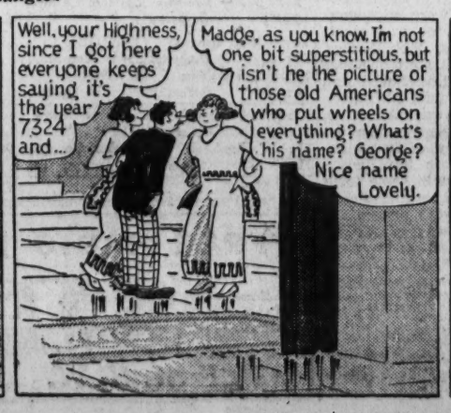
Hello Madge, what's new? I hear a few of those hair-brained Reds are starting some sort of Votes-for-Men foolishness and.... Oh! Who's this?

Oh Chloe, he's the most charming man.. says he came from the year 1935 and... You tell her Highness, George.
Well, I got here in a rocket, and...
In a what? Madge, isn't he tall? So good looking. Bold, too.



Well, your Highness, since I got here everyone keeps saying it's the year 7324 and...
Madge, as you know, I'm not one bit superstitious, but isn't he the picture of those old Americans who put wheels on everything? What's his name? George? Nice name Lovely.

Ah... George and I got to be very good friends while waiting for you, Chloe, and.
George! Madge, this is fate. I knew it the very moment I walked in and saw him. Sit down here, George, near me.. and tell me about, oh... this rocket business.

Courtney Ryley Cooper's '10,000 Public Enemies'

Chapter XXVII—Gangdom's Housecleaning.

There is no doubt that Frank Nash, living, had been an important figure in the criminal world. Paradoxically, however, this criminal's most important contribution was to the cause of law enforcement. Largely because of the manner of his death and the killing of those who went down with him, the Bureau of Investigation is now the best-equipped crime-fighting organization in the world. It possesses the armament with which to attack any gang, no matter how strongly entrenched, how desperate, how well-armed. It has new laws to support it, some of which were conceived as the result of the Kansas City massacre.

The Kansas City case even led to reforms in the underworld. Perhaps one of the strangest meetings ever held was that which was called in Chicago shortly after the Kansas City slayings and attended by the more influential of confidence men from every part of America.

The self-appointed task of the confidence man always has been to stay clear of violent criminality. This is a proud profession, possessing, in its own opinion, a certain degree of aristocracy. Therefore the news that a member of their guild had become involved in a gangster-killing was a terrific blow.

"Just because Deafy Farmer's gotten mixed up with a lot of the wrong kind of people," a principal reformer insisted, "is no reason we've got to lose our self-respect. We invented the quiet country hide-out; it's a part of our equipment. We're not crooks. We live by the larceny in the other fellows' hearts. Nobody puts a gun on any sucker and makes him get into a card game with us, or cut in on a little deal to beat the races. I'm telling you we've got to clean house. Got to throw out these people that are ruining our profession!"

Strata Noticeable Even in Crime

Thus, it may be seen, there are strata of society, even in crime. Since that date, incidentally, there has been far less fraternization between the men who live by gunfire and those who exist by their wits. Confidence men have a distinct aversion to getting into trouble.

In the list of queer aftermaths to the killing of Frank Nash was perhaps the most novel alibi in the history of criminality.

A bank at Black Rock, Ark., was robbed on the morning previous to the affair in Kansas City. Arrests were made in Oklahoma. Almost immediately a letter was sent to the Oklahoma Bureau of Identification, protesting the innocence of the incarcerated men. It read:

"If it is your desire to see justice done, you will deny extradition papers to the accused parties of the Black Rock, Ark., bank. Inclosed herewith to the Bureau of Identification is a confession by the several parties in the above robbery."

Then followed a detailed statement, requiring an entire foolscap page of single-spaced typing, which delineated every move in the Black Rock robbery. It told details that only the robbers themselves could know. The confession was signed by five of the six Lansing "cows:" Robert G. Brady, Ed Davis, Jim Clark, Wilbur Underhill and Harvey Bailey. Following the signature, each man affixed his fingerprints as a means of absolute identification.

There were two sidelights to this confession, one wholly naive, the other equally sophisticated. In a postscript the bandits suggested that if the newspapers desired to photograph the confession it should be retyped, as the machine upon which it was written was badly out of repair, plus the fact that none of the bandits was a good typist. The other was the highly important fact that, in spite of the willingness to accept responsibility for the bank robbery, neither Harvey Bailey nor Wilbur Underhill was guilty in the Black Rock holdup!

So much for the interludes. Once the chaff of the case had been sifted, the Bureau of Investigation, working in co-operation with police throughout the country, began a determined campaign to make every person involved in the Kansas City massacre pay for his part in it.

Herb Farmer and Esther were arrested, charged with conspiracy to release a Federal prisoner. Fritz Mulloy and Doc Stacci were caught on the same charges. The chase for Pretty Boy Floyd and Adam Richetti already had been recited. Frances Nash was arrested at Aurora, Minn. Richard Galatas was pursued from one end of the country to another; finally he was caught in New Orleans, La., as the result of astute work by citizens who had recognized him from his picture, published in a magazine. His wife was apprehended with him. Vivian Mathis and Verne Miller, however, apparently had escaped.

At last the special agents, watching every possible avenue of communication, found that a package of salt-water taffy had been delivered to Vi Miller's child, now at home with her grandparents. It had come from Atlantic City. The chase veered to the East. Every candy shop in the resort town was visited. At last one was found which remembered Vi Miller, or Vi Mathis, as she now was known. Hotels were checked. Yes, she had stayed at one of the most exclusive places in Atlantic City, but had departed.

Trail Doubles Back Upon Vi Mathis

The trailing of Vi Mathis led to New York, Newark, to resorts in New York State, to Montreal, back to New York and finally to Chicago. There special agents traced the woman to the apartment of a friend, Bobby Moore.

Here enters one of the strange vagaries of crime. Bobby was the mother of two children and supported them by working in a night club. She had known Vi Mathis for years and had known Verne Miller, but she never had mingled with their crowd; she had no criminal record. Yet she did not hesitate in a crucial moment to defy both municipal and Federal officers.

The special agents were shadowing Vi Mathis. On Hallow'en Day, 1933, Vi gave a party for her little girl and for other children in the apartment house. Suddenly a man drove up and entered. A quick endeavor was made to set a trap. The man was Verne Miller, home at last.

Due to the necessity of haste, one loophole was left. Verne Miller took it as he rushed from the apartment. Even then he could not have escaped except for Bobby Moore. She ran across the street and got Verne Miller's car, whirling it to the curb with the motor running. Special agents and police shouted for her to halt, as Verne leaped into the car. The answer was a flash of fire from Miller's automatic, as the car sped down the street.

Behind the fleeing car, police and special agents, hampered in their aim by passing traffic, by the darkness and the erratic course of the automobile, strove to halt it by gunfire. At last, the car slipped out of range, and finally was deserted. Verne Miller had escaped, because a woman, who apparently had been law-abiding, suddenly had chosen to become a volunteer in crime.

Bobby Moore paid for her rescue. She was sentenced to a year and a day. Vi Mathis received the same punishment. The abandoned car was found and traced. It had been bought for Miller in New Jersey by an associate of liquor interests named Al Silvers. Gangdom intervened in the cause of justice before prosecution could be instituted. The body of Silvers was found one morning beside a road in Connecticut. The man had been stabbed to death with a broad-nosed knife and about his neck was a noose. Covering this was the sole piece of wearing apparel on the man's body, a newly purchased, perfectly tied four-in-hand. Perhaps Al Silvers died because he had violated the rules which seemed to have gone north from big-time crooks that Verne Miller was not to be given aid.

Shortly after the massacre, he stopped at the apartment of Volney Davis, an old friend, in Chicago. Volney suggested that Verne go to the Barker-Karpis gang for aid. After all, Fred Barker owed a part of his early tutelage to Frank Nash and the Miller crowd, gaining thereby much of the resourcefulness by which his gang now was becoming known as one of the most dangerous in America. Verne Miller was tired. He was dusty and grimy; he was gaunt from worry. But he glared at the mention of Fred Barker's name.

"That lousy rat?" he asked. "Why, he's gone in for kidnaping!"

Host Was Interested In Kidnaping Game

Perhaps the word got back to the Barker-Karpis gang. All unknown to Verne Miller, his host also was interested in kidnaping; within a year he was to be sought with the rest of the Barker-Karpis crowd as a "snatcher."

At last Verne went to Detroit.

The underworld says that he had written to an old friend there, stating a need of money, and that he was given a job which had its sardonic angles. There is a grim type of humor about gangdom, the kind which gets a laugh out of murder. According to gangsters, Verne was hired to machine-gun three men and then paid in his own coin.

At 7 o'clock on the night of November 29, 1933, a business man was driving home from work, when his headlights shone upon a strange bundle in a vacant lot. It lay near a culvert, almost hidden by marsh grass, a queerly bunched affair, covered by some cheap blankets and an equally cheap automobile robe. He reported the find to the police. Arriving, they raised the blanket.

There, his legs drawn tight against his torso by repeated wrapping of new clothesline, was the body of a murdered man. He was nude. Marks on his throat gave evidence that he had been garroted. His skull had been crushed by repeated blows from a claw hammer. He was a man in his thirties, with a heavy red mustache and red hair which seemed to have been dyed. At the morgue, the police took his fingerprints and thereby established his identity. This man was Verne Miller.

In that murder lies an evidence of the precision with which the underworld functions. Verne Miller evidently was killed while asleep. His nerves shaken as the result of the relentless pursuit by Federal agents and police, he had gone in for periods of heavy drinking. Perhaps he wanted to forget that carmine-splashed morning at the Union Station plaza. Perhaps, too, he desired to free him mind of the incessant knowledge that special agents were constantly moving closer, like a group of well-organized hunters beating quarry out of thick grass. There were times when he would get sodden drunk and sleep for hours, stupefied.

So Verne was dead. Bobby Moore and Vi Mathis were in a Federal reformatory. More than a year passed before the trial of the other accused persons, Vi Mathis finished her term and pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy. Frances Nash turned State's evidence; the accusations against her were dismissed. Richetti was held for a separate trial. All the others, Herb Farmer, Esther, his wife, Richard Galatas and Mrs. Galatas, Doc Stacci and Fritz Mulloy were found guilty; the women involved were placed on probation. Thus every person accused by the Bureau of Investigation of active part in the Kansas City massacre met with some form of retribution. The rest of the 81 suspected persons were proven innocent by the same methods by which the convicted ones were proven guilty.

Tomorrow, "Snatchers" outwitted.

On The Air Today

Yesterday afternoon representatives of the National Broadcasting Co. and Columbia Broadcasting System quietly slipped into a sick room at Children's Hospital. It was Mattie Gibson's room—for even hospital superintendents suffer from afflictions that beset we poor mortals.

The delegation brought a check—a contribution of almost $2,000, the fruits of a night at the Griffith Stadium when two-score members of the staffs of the local radio stations engaged in Washington's first donkey baseball game before an amazing audience of 9,000.

"But Miss Gibson is ill," one of the visitors said when it was proposed the check be given in her sick room.

"Ah, the check will comfort her," was the reply. "To know that our children will be benefited by so generous an amount will certainly cheer her—perhaps hasten her recovery."

So—if you were among the thousands who whooped and laughed themselves delirious over the comical duel between man and beast Thursday night, consider a moment that your half-dollar has gone to assist some youngster in regaining his health, and the "boss's," too.

Two casualties were reported following the game. Harold Gray appeared at WJSV with the help of a cane, and Warren Sweeney will be nursing a painfully sprained ankle for some days to come. Fortunately announcers sit down when they work. And equally fortunately no "injuries" were reported affecting the general area necessary for comfortable sitting. Although it was not the charitableness of the burros that accounted for a lack of such injuries. NBC reports every man able-bodied, although Engineer Chew did an act of tumbling on one occasion, landing on his elbow, which would have done credit to a circus performer.

The Scout Jamboree may be called off, but Scouts the Nation over will have an opportunity of hearing what President Roosevelt would have said to them here. C. B. S. reports the President will address the boys on the 21st at 8:45 p. m. N. B. C. doubtless will carry the talk, too.

"Down by Herman's," a variety show from Milwaukee, is now scheduled for Eastern listeners by C. B. S. It's a German dialect half-hour show with the scene of action in a little German beer garden—and, of course, with a German band. "Down by Herman's" has been on the air only a short time, but its genial music, simple humor and intimate charm recommended it for the network at once. It will be heard from WJSV at 1:30 p. m.

This is premiere night for Fred Astaire. A special dance platform has been built for Astaire's flying feet. Microphones 10 inches off the floor, at the platform level, will bring the sound of his dancing and those at ordinary level will catch his voice as he sings three new songs from "Top Hat," his forthcoming picture. Lennie Hayton's orchestra provides a musical background. The show is Hit Parade, WRC, at 7.

Alice Brady will play a scene from "Elizabeth the Queen" in the Chateau program, WRC, at 8:30. Starring with Miss Brady will be Irvin Cobb in a humorous monologue, and Patsy Kelly, comedienne of "Wonder Bar," "Flying Colors" and other Broadway successes.

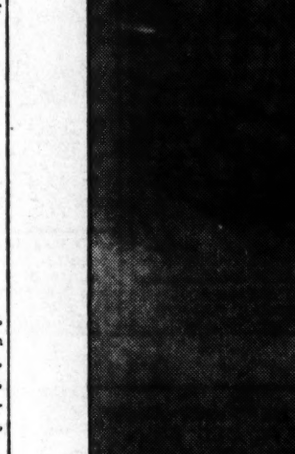
Culbertson on Bridge

Adverse Trump Length Failed.

Even when declarer has only four trumps and one of his opponents has five, it is sometimes possible not to lose a trick in the trump suit. The particular method by which this end is attained was employed to good purpose by the declarer in a Grand Slam contract on the deal below:

West, Dealer
Both sides vulnerable



The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	1♣	Pass	1♠
Pass	2NT	Pass	3♡
Pass	7♡	Pass	Pass
Pass

The final Grand Slam contract was not quite sound, particularly with the reduced Grand Slam bonus now in effect. South became a trifle too ambitious because of North's two notrump rebid and North can hardly be blamed for bidding seven after South had jumped to six. South should have made a Slam try by bidding only five hearts, leaving it to North to close the bidding at six.

The Play.

West opened a heart, dummy played the deuce and East's ten was won by South's Jack. Establishment of the spade suit being necessary, South next led to the King of spades and returned the Jack, on which the fall of West's Queen caused South's entire spade suit to be established. There now remained only the problem of drawing trumps. South feared West might have had five trumps because otherwise East might have withheld the ten on the first trick. But if West also held four diamonds, there was a possibility of cross-ruffing with the high trumps.

First two clubs were cashed, a diamond being played on one of them. The Ace of diamonds was next led. Next the Queen of hearts was played and when East failed to follow suit, South overtook with the King and began to cash his spades. The ten and nine allowed him to discard two of dummy's diamonds. On these tricks West was powerless to even make things difficult for South; if West ruffed, dummy's Ace would overruff and South would reenter his hand with the King of diamonds, draw two more rounds of trumps and cash his spades for the last tricks.

West decided, while South was cashing the spades, to discard diamonds. On the ten and nine of spades, West threw two diamonds and dummy also threw two diamonds. Each had one diamond left at this point, and South now led his last spade, the six. If West threw the diamond, dummy's last diamond would be discarded, the King of diamonds would be ruffed with the Ace of trumps, and the last two tricks would be won by South's trumps. Of course, if West ruffed, he would still have a diamond and could not prevent South's reentering his hand with the King of diamonds to cash the two high hearts at the end.
